3 Local Chambers Plan Northeastern Pa. Story

The Northeastern Pennsylvania story in words and pictures will be published in book form as a combined effort of the Wilkes-Barre, Scranton and Pittston Chambers of Commerce, according to a joint announcement made today by the three chambers.

Designed to tell a unified, comprehensive story of the sister communities, the book will be used to attract new industry to the area and for a number of additional purposes. Cost of the book will be underwritten by advertising space purchased by business firms and other organizations in the area. The book will be produced by Windsor Publications, specialists in the creation and production of books for communities throughout the United States.

The decision to adopt a unified approach—rather than each community "going it alone"—was made at a recent meeting of officials of the three Chambers with a representative of the Windsor organization. The combined approach of the Wilkes-Barre, Pittston and Scranton chambers is the first instance of a unified effort of this type in Windsor's experience. Shortly, an editorial team from Windsor will begin gathering facts and shooting pictures in the region. They will cover transportation, utilities and commerce, schools, churches, residential and recreational areas, and the people of the region. In essence, the book will be a colorful portrayal of the "life style" of the communities, individually and collectively. The book, which will be in full color on glossy stock, will be used as a basic "sales tool" by organizations and individuals for inducing new industry to locate here, to attract professional people to the area, to serve as a retail buyer's guide for local people, and as an all-purpose piece to show people quality of life of Northeastern Pennsylvania.

Making the announcement were the presidents of the three chambers, Richard M. Ross Jr., greater Wilkes-Barre; Robert E. Nolan, Jr., greater Scranton; and Joseph A. Quinn, greater Pittston. In making their joint announcement, the three said, "We view this "life-style" book as an important forward step, not only for each of the communities, but for the entire region."
