

L.C.C.C. Offers Variety Programs This Semester

Students who register for the fall semester at Luzerne County Community College Aug. 20-22 will have a wider variety of programs to choose from than ever before. Several new programs are being offered, including recreation leadership and physical education, preoptometry, pre-pharmacy, journalism and the medical office assistant program.

Recreation leadership and physical education is a two-year program offering an Associate in Applied Science degree. The curriculum is designed to prepare graduates for immediate employment in the recreation field or for advanced study toward a bachelor's degree at a transfer institution. Students will learn to develop to highest potentials in physical skills, leadership ability, and the understanding of human movement.

Two-year liberal arts-science associate degree programs in pre-optometry and pre-pharmacy are also being offered for the first time this fall. Graduates of these programs will be qualified for transfer to colleges of pharmacy or optometry.

A new program in journalism leading to the Associate in Applied Science degree will also be offered at Luzerne County Community College this fall. This program is designed to furnish students with the basic verbal and academic skills required of those who plan to enter into the field of newspaper journalism or a related area. Practical application will be emphasized in addition to classroom learning, thus furnishing a perspective on available employment opportunities.

Also offered for the first time this fall will be the medical office assistant program which will lead to the Certificate of Proficiency.

This program is designed to provide the student with a basic knowledge of medical office and hospital procedures. Upon completion, the student will be prepared to work in a hospital as a medical transcriber or ward secretary as well as in other related medical occupations.

Students interested in these programs may obtain additional information by contacting the Admissions Office at Luzerne County Community College, Prospect Street and Middle Road, Nanticoke, 18634.

Dallas Cheerleaders Attend Camp in N.J.

Ten of Dallas Senior High School cheerleaders recently attended an International Cheerleading Foundation Camp at Seton Hall University in New Jersey, where they learned new cheers, charts, and routines. Each day the girls were evaluated on the cheers and routines they had learned that day.

The Dallas squad was one of approximately 15 squads attending the camp, and the girls met other groups from Manville and Long Beach Island, N.J.

The Dallas squad won four blue ribbons for their excellent presentation of cheers and on the final day competition was held at 9 a.m. The Dallas girls were awarded a blue ribbon and the coveted first place grand champion trophy.

During the final day of camp, the girls donated money to the Multiple Sclerosis fund. It was money the cheerleaders had earned throughout the summer months to help finance their camp stay. Susan Miller, who had planned to attend with the others, was unable to do so due to the fact that while traveling in Europe she and her parents were detained in Turkey for three weeks because of the recent crisis.

Twenty-two regulars and two alternates make up the Dallas Senior High School squad which is under the direction of Sally Harter, French teacher, and Donna Topolewski, assistant. Sophomores, juniors and seniors are eligible.

New Religion Courses Offered by Seminary

The Wyoming Seminary Upper School has vastly expanded its offerings in religion for the 1974-75 school year.

In the past, two, one-term courses were offered: Old Testament and New Testament studies. Seminary began putting further emphasis on the religion program last year, when total class meetings for the two courses were upped to 55, from the 34 times they had met in past school years.

Robert D. Klarsch, Seminary's academic dean, has announced that this year the Kingston college prep school will offer eight religion courses, seven of which will be elective.

A one-term course entitled "Introduction to the Bible" is the newly-designed, requirement course in religion. Students are also required to make at least one more selection from the list of religion electives.

"The Life and Teachings of Jesus," "The Life and Teachings of St. Paul," "Personalities of the Old Testament" and "The Prophets," are one-term electives that fulfill the other half of the Seminary religion requirement. "History of the Christian Church" is a two-term elective that also fulfills the elective requirement.

These electives can also be taken by interested students who have already fulfilled their religion requirement, as can "Christian Ethics," a religion elective which does not count toward the requirement.

"World Religions" is a three-term, full-year course, limited to seniors as a major. It deals with Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism, Christianity and other great world religions.

Brian L. Cloud, who also serves as Seminary's chaplain, is the instructor for religion courses. Mr. Cloud holds a Master of Divinity degree from Lancaster Theological Seminary.

Seminary Day School

Appoints Karen Olsson

The Wyoming Seminary Day School, Forty Fort, has taken on a new second grade teacher for the 1974-75 school year. John Magagna, assistant Seminary headmaster in charge of the Day School, recently announced the appointment of Karen Olsson, a native of New York City, to the position.

Miss Olsson holds a B.S. degree in elementary education from Bucknell University, Lewisburg. Karen completed her student teaching requirements this past spring in a first grade class of the Danville Public Schools.

Miss Olsson has long been active in working with young people, through community volunteer programs. Miss Olsson has tutored the children of migrant workers, helped poor readers in local public schools and assisted in Girl Scout and church organizations.

Karen spent the summer working in the international division of a New York City bank, traveling throughout Europe.

Penn State is Surveying New Technician's Careers

Biomedical Equipment Technology (BMET), a new career in the health field, is emerging in response to the need for technicians who can handle the installation, operation, repair, maintenance and calibration of electronic equipment vital to diagnosis and treatment.

And, according to surveys conducted by the Technical Education Research Council of Cambridge, Mass., manpower studies estimate a yearly need for more than 1300 BMET's with the need for both men and women to increase as health care facilities become more complex.

Local interest in a proposed new educational career opportunity in this vital new field is currently being surveyed by the Wilkes-Barre Campus of the Pennsylvania State University,

George W. Bierly, local campus director has announced.

Mr. Bierly said, "We are in the process of sending letters to hospitals, health and medical groups, and prospective students who might have an interest in a career opportunity in this new area. I feel confident the response to our survey will be favorable both in the area interest and student applications. If the anticipated preliminary funding is granted next month, Penn State's Wilkes-Barre Campus will accept a group of students in September in the proposed two-year associate degree program of Biomedical Equipment Technology."

Although no previous experience is required in this new career field for admission to the program, Mr. Bierly stated it should be a most attractive field for veterans with medical and electronic experience and women who at this time constitute the majority of health field personnel.

Further information on this new career opportunity may be obtained from the Penn State Wilkes-Barre Campus.

Brian Corbett, 15 Makes Hole-in-one

Brian Corbett, 15 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Corbett, Clearview Avenue, Trucksville, joined the ranks of golfers who enjoy the thrill of achieving a hole-in-one.

Brian performed the feat earlier this week while playing at the Orange Golf Course. Brian hit the ball for a 150 yards with a No. 7 iron on the ninth hole.

Witnessing the young Dallas High School student's accomplishment were Joe Thomas, Bill Thomas, John Roushey, and Joe Maniskas.

Robert Sabatino, career counselor at Penn State's Wilkes-Barre Campus, and Mike Brown, second year student, are shown prior to their match on the newly constructed tennis courts on campus. The courts which have been in use for the past several weeks are for use by the students, faculty and residents of the area. Students and faculty have preference during the class hours and area residents by reserving time after school hours.
