Philharmonic not moving

A story that the Northeastern Pennsylvania Philharmonic is considering a move from Avoca to Pottsville is completely untrue, said Philharmonic general manager John Beck today.

The Philharmonic was founded four years ago through the merger of orchestras in Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, and these two cities are and will remain its home. The Philharmonic's offices are located in Avoca in order to facilitate communication between the two cities.

A delegation of board members from the Philharmonic met with civic leaders in Pottsville on June 20 to discuss plans for one or two concerts by the Philharmonic there in the coming season. Such concerts would be like those the orchestra now performs in Honesdale, Hawley, Bloomsburg and elsewhere.

The backbone of the orchestra's season, however, is a series of five subscription concerts in Wilkes-Barre and Scranton and three pairs of young persons' concerts played for grade and high school students in the area.

Like all symphony orchestras the Philharmonic operates at a deficit and relies on donations from music lovers throughout the region to balance its books each year. At a meeting on June 26, the Philharmonic's board of directors approved a budget of over $200,000 for the coming fiscal year.

'Mr. Jenkins' looks on 'fortunate' Dallas

Thomas H. Jenkins can still be found in the administration offices at Dallas High School, despite the fact that his last official day on the job was Monday.

"Mr. Jenkins", retiring from the position for reasons of health, will remain at his post for a brief transitional period to help Joseph Kasmark, who has been appointed to replace him.

Looking back over the years behind his cluttered desk Tuesday, Jenkins had only favorable remarks for the school district. "Dallas has the nicest group of students, the nicest group of parents, its been the finest place to raise a family," he said.

Horse Show

July 3 and free for children under 12 on the fourth and fifth.

The show will also feature refreshments and games of skill for bystanders. Proceeds gained at the show help support the Lehman Volunteer Fire Company.

Officers of the fire company are Edward Hartman, president, Ron Wenrich, vice president; Doug Ehret, secretary and Joe Ellsworth, treasurer. Line officers include Harold Coolbaugh, fire chief; Dave Sutton, assistant; Robert Disque, Jr., Bob Margellina and Ron Wenrich, captains and John Bebey, engineer. Lewis Ide is show grounds chairman.

the Dallas schools by saying that his work here disproved two axioms he learned in methods courses before beginning his school district career here in 1940. "Never work in your home town until you have taught long enough to make a decision," were Mr. Jenkins broken axioms.

Jenkins started teaching in Kingston Township in 1940, from there he became athletic director, assistant principal, principal and in 1969 he was named assistant to the superintendent and later, secretary of the school board.

Jenkins' memories of the school include the struggles for consolidation and the final victory and the fortune of the school in its staff and growth. The names that come to his mind when looking back are the three principals, James A. Martin, Kingston Township; Charles James, Dallas Borough and Ray Kuhnert, Dallas Township and Dr. Robert Mellman, the first consolidation superintendent.

The "good men and women on the staff and board, that were willing to give of themselves for the school system", is what makes Dallas fortunate, according to Jenkins.

Dallas' future, looks good to Jenkins, too. "Dallas is fortunate in that the community has always been willing to pay for good education," he said.

The district is "very fortunate in having the kind of educational leadership brought it by Dr. Linford Werkheiser," according to Jenkins. "if he continues with the support of the board and the community, Dallas will continue to have an outstanding school district."

Jenkins will soon be leaving his offices for good, leaving with him will be 35 years of work for a "fortunate" school district.
