Dallas students visit White Haven

On Wednesday, Jan. 5, the psychology classes at Dallas Senior High School under the supervision of Jay Pope, psychology teacher, and Edward Potera, school librarian, witnessed the work and studies of mental retardation taking place at White Haven State School and Hospital, now known as the White Haven Center.

Approximately 65 students toured the facilities. The students were shown the speech and hearing center, the therapeutic workshop, various classrooms, dietary facilities, gymnasium and the pool. All of the facilities are used quite frequently by the patients throughout the day for educational, therapeutical and recreational purposes.

The majority of the 800 residents at the center are over 21 years of age and these patients participate in adult education similar to a kindergarten or first grade class. Patients under 21 are trained in special education to dress themselves, wash, etc.

The doors of the patients' rooms are not locked and they are allowed certain freedoms in an effort to increase their level of responsibility. A good percentage of the residents have been at the center since birth.

Dallas students considered the trip beneficial in adding to their knowledge of mental retardation.

The White Haven Center is open to any interested touring groups. Arrangements may be made by contacting Paul Koons, director of public relations, at the Center.
