

'All kinds' of music featured by firemen

If music is what you want, music is what you get at the Daniel C. Roberts Firemen's Fair at Old Sandy Bottom Beach, Harveys Lake, next week. The Harveys Lake firemen have scheduled live instrumental music to complement their other food and game attractions during their Aug. 3-5 fair. They've selected groups to represent bluegrass, country and western and rock music on the successive nights.

Wednesday the attraction will be the Back Mountain String Band. Thursday it's Bob Jones and the Country Cousins. Then Friday, following a gala 7 p.m. parade around the Lake, Oak Hill's favorite rock group, Chickie and the Last Call will perform.

A dance area will be provided. Of course, the usual game booths will be featured including the dog and frisbee event, mouse-in-the-hole, dunking tank and other favorites. Fire engine rides will also be provided.

Proceeds from the three-day event will be applied to a loan recently obtained for the purchase of a new fire truck.

Chairman of the event is Bill Davis. Jim Faerber is parade chairman.

Berm controversy

own the property where the berms will be constructed."

Ed Lipski, a resident of Town and Country and one of the few pushing for the construction, has begun legal proceedings against the supervisors for not enforcing the township ordinance regarding proper berming and draining as set down by law. Lipski said one quarter of his frontage is unusable as a result of water, silt and mud draining from across the road and through his yard.

"When it rains I have a veritable waterfall coming into my yard," Lipski said. "I wrote to the supervisors about this and they have not responded. So I have turned the matter over to my attorney."

This isn't the first complaint Lipski has aired since moving into the Manor in 1974.

"If I had known all the problems we would be engaged in I would not have built here," Lipski said. "We've had problems with the water, with mail service, with the roads and now the berms."

According to Hozempa, the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission was called in concerning alleged illegal use of the private water company in the development. "The PUC was after him (Cybul) at one time," Hozempa said. "He was supposed to have only so many people on a pipe and he had more. He also never even registered the water company with the PUC."

Cybul, however, said he has had no problem at all with the PUC. "We are allowed 50 people on one line, and we don't have near that," Mrs. Cybul said.

As for the mail service, residents on the privately owned road do not have door-to-door mail service. In the event the supervisors take over the road, door-to-door service could be initiated.

When the new roads were built in 1972, the supervisors insisted the base was not according to specification, Hozempa said. Lipski said the residents had to fight to even have the roads constructed.

"We got so tired of driving over potholes six inches to a foot deep that we went to the supervisors to push for a road," Lipski said. "Then we had nothing but trouble over the size."

The residents that don't want the berm are basically worried about the esthetic beauty of their lawns, as well as money poured into fill and grass seed to raise the lawns. When the 1972 road was constructed, it was higher than most lawns by a few inches.

Charles Nafus, another resident of Town and Country, claims he will be discriminated against if berms are constructed only on the privately-owned drives in the manor.

Nafus' property is a corner lot, facing a township road and sided by a private road. The five-foot proposed berm would cut into his driveway, Nafus said, and eventually could cause water to run onto his property.

Martin Lukas was among the residents who filled his yard in, using top soil and grass to raise it the needed three inches to raise above the road. Lukas said he resents having a sand and gravel berm in front of his lawn.

Many residents and Cybul himself claim the sand and gravel used for the berms would wash away with the first rain, causing more trouble for the Manor. Some residents would prefer a grass berm, much like exists in other places of the Manor.

But Hozempa said after the sand and gravel is tamped and packed it would not be washed away. "It would be as hard as blacktop" he said.

A grass berm would take two to three months of dry weather to become effective, Hozempa said, and is not feasible for the street grades involved.

According to the supervisors, Cybul still has an Aug. 30 deadline for the completion of the berms. If he does not comply with the resolution of the supervisors, Hozempa said they will begin legal action against him.
