

Kerekes completes N.C. program

SCIENCE SCHOLAR—Bob Kerekes prepares a ceramic sample for testing as part of his study of thermoluminescent dating.

Chiggers have been just one of the unexpected discoveries by Bob Kerekes, a Dallas Senior High School student, while attending the science scholar program at St. Andrews Presbyterian College, Laurinburg, N.C., this summer.

The five-week program, emphasizing science and archaeology, has included many field trips for the pre-college group of 26 high school students. One particular field trip led to the discovery that chiggers are miserable companions for research.

Designed primarily for rising senior high school students and sponsored by the National Science Foundation, the program is open to high school students with a demonstrated ability in science and or archaeology. After a week of indoctrination, students had the opportunity to pursue specialized study with one of two St. Andrews faculty members, Dr. Karen Barnes and Dr. David McLean, or Campbell College professor Dr. Bob Hope.

Bob, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Kerekes of Route 2, Dallas, chose to study ceramics and thermoluminescent dating of pottery under Dr. Barnes.

It was not quite the frivolous topic some students first thought it would be before Dr. Barnes explained the involved techniques of dating and cataloging.

"When you work with pottery you are intrigued by all aspects," says Dr.

Barnes, who has spent several years researching the area of thermoluminescent dating.

The study of pottery has involved field trips to the trestle site on the Pee Dee River and other areas in Scotland County, N.C., where pottery samples were collected. The samples were brought back to the college, washed, catalogued and eventually dated.

By examining the pottery through scientific techniques the students will learn about the Indian pottery industry of the area and their culture.

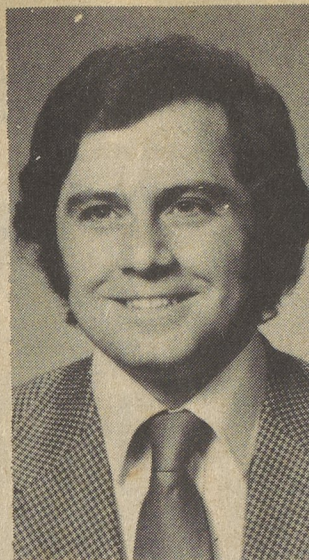

Barnes says that this type of experiment design will carry over into any field. "The students will learn laboratory techniques and use equipment that most high school students don't have the opportunity to use," she continues. "And if they are really interested in archaeology they will learn about recognizing the different types of pottery and begin to understand what you can learn about a culture from its pottery."
