Lake Lehman joins appeal for local control

The on-going battle for more local control of the public schools will continue as the State Supreme Court is expected to hear an appeal by the Department of Education to restore student rights and responsibilities regulations as established by the State Board of Education.

A consortium of 170 school districts, almost one-third of the state's 505 school boards, have organized under the Committee for Local Educational Control and the Girard School District, which originally began legal action challenging the state board's rule making authority.

The Girard School District, along with 28 other school districts joined the original action two years ago. An additional 12 school districts and one intermediate unit also supported these districts.

Commonwealth Court last March handed down a 6-1 decision that said the state board's student rights regulations were "invalid for want of a statutory authority to support them." The court found the state board has no statutory authority to adopt such regulations, but rather the school Code specifically grants authority over student conduct to local school boards.

J. Donald Schwab, operating committee chairman for the consortium and a former member of the Girard School board, said a request had been made for the Supreme Court to hear the case in Pittsburgh in September.

"Contributions have been received from large metropolitan areas as well as small school districts, which indicates the broad base of support for our position in this case," he said. "We are enthused by the support of so many districts and pleased that the Supreme Court will hear this issue of statewide interest in September with the hope that local control or schools will be assured."

The Department of Education appealed the Commonwealth Court decision in April. Lake-Lehman School District is one off the 170 school districts participating in the appeal.

Newcomers seek members

New residents of the Wyoming Valley area who would like to meet other families and take both a civic and social interest in the community, may join the Newcomers Club on Sept. 12, 8 p.m. at Grace Episcopal Church, Butler Street, Kingston.

The Newcomers Club is an organization designed to bring together women who are new to the area. Members help create new friendships and take an active interest in the community. Some of their projects include the American Cancer Society, Blind Association of Wilkes-Barre, Leader East Nursing Home, Valley Crest, WVIA-TV, Juvenile Diabetic Association, and the Childrens Museum.

With the assistance of Mrs. Thomas Brightbill, who was a resident of Johnstown, the club collected personal items to aid the Johnstown flood victims. Mrs. William Corgan of Kingston, and Mrs. Kenneth Kozel of Dallas, also assisted.

There were several new and general membership coffees held during the summer and a picnic at

Trinity youth build chapel in N.Hampshire

Twenty one youth members and their chaperones of Trinity Lutheran Presbyterian Church returned home last weekend from Camp Wilmot, Presbyterian Church in central New Hampshire.

The local group spent a week, Aug. 13 to Aug. 20 at the camp where they constructed the seating for the camp's outdoor chapel. The project was completed by the local members in time to have a Communion Service in the chapel on Friday evening.

This year marked the second visit to the camp by a group from the local church. In 1974, the local group built a bridge which was needed at the campsite.

This year, the members volunteered to build the seats for the chapel. While there they took several side trips to points of interest in New Hampshire.
