Museum exhibits past fashions

The closet doors of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society were opened last week to bring out fashions of the past. The clothes are presently being exhibited at the Children's Museum for its monthly Way-Out-Workshop. This month's topic is "The Sweet Shop". The fashions being displayed are fine examples of how the square and rectangle are used in clothing patterns. Various colonial and Victorian dress have been graciously made available for public viewing. The Children's Museum's W-O-W workshop (utilizing the geometry concepts) has children age 4-14 design paper clothes. Using the basic forms of square and rectangle, innumerable variations are developed through inter-changing necklines, sleeves and decorations.
