BURNHAM

by L.D. Burnham

We regard our lives too lightly. We spend too much energy in pursuit of good times. Too often, we laugh too quickly. We fail to approach our problems with the realistic outlook they deserve. We forever seek entertainment and diversion.

"Stop," I said to mayself. "Just stop and get life in a proper per-Production sepctive. Be practical," I chided Production myself. PRACTICAL, that's the Production word. PRACTICAL! Production

Office

Deep down inside, weren't you searching for something practical when you opened to this page? Weren't you looking for something to act as mortar for life's loose bricks? Of course. The mind's energies are so often wasted on the trivial. Get back down to earth, brother. Be practical. And to get you properly directed on the practical pavement I've listed below some excerpts from Burnham's Practically Perfect Precepts.

The subject is walking. My advice? Stick with the basics; walk on the bottoms of your feet. Statisics show that nine out of 10 successful walkers tread on their feet bottoms on a regular basis. Another hint: be sure to place your feet bottoms on solid, preferably flat, surfaces. Avoid strolling on liquids (unless you're trying to impress that special someone). Don't walk outside aircraft in flight or stray out open windows.

Although it certainly is a temptation at times (you're income tax is due, you just got an oil bill) you must consider the wear and tear on your body. Remember, the feet are very sensitive. Statistics show that people who pursue this form of recreation are at least 75 percent shorter than average and in poor physical condition. It may be a good way to loosen tensions but remember--the word is PRAC-TICAL.

What about raking leaves? you might ask. One rule: don't. You read it right. Don't rake leaves. Leaves fall from trees under the pretense of being dead--but they're not. They are crawling, coniving creatures. They attack drain gutters; they sweep themselves beneath doors; they bury unassuming lawns.

quality of the defect that concerns the department.

Engine switches, transmission alterations--who knows where the next big trend in defects may be. Who knows when we might hear GM advertise:

"We're teasing Mrs. Moore. We've told her we're taking the engines out of our GM cars. Let's see what she says.'

"Well, I'm not happy. I'm very upset. I just don't know what I'll do. I bought the car because I though it had an engine. I guess it'll get better gas mileage, but it'll surely be an inconvenience.'

"Relax, Mrs. Moore. We're just teasing.' "Well, I'm relieved. I'm pleased.

I'm tickled to death.' What they haven't told Mrs.

Moore is that they've put a fourcylinder engine in her Monte Carlo. In the meantime, we view industry with awe. We're shown film of happy families touring the Ford plant, their eyes aglow with amazement. It must be an almost holy experience.

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Ford. It is tearing down the highway doing 30 when its floored. It gets 15 miles a gallon though the ad says 34. The wheels keep falling off.

Glory, glory, hallelujah, The guarantee will put it to ya.

Glory, glory, hallelujah, Big business marches on."

So who can afford to buy anything? You pay more--you get less. Now that's not practical--Lord, that's INCREDIBLE!

Township Concerned Taxpayers Association; Dr. F. Budd Schooley, president of Back Mountain Protective Association, and Stanley Magalski, president of the Lehman Township Taxpayers Association. Future meetings of the group will be held for cooperative action to consider community problems.

All groups met Nov. 5 at the office of Atty. James Reinert, Pioneer Avenue, Shavertown, to evaluate UGI's proposed rate increase of $3,200,000.

School fire

State Police fire marshal's office at the Wyoming Barracks. An investigator was at the scene within 30 minutes.

By late morning, the fire was under control and by 1:30 p.m., it was declared out. Lake Engine 25 and Truck 27, with additional manpower, stayed on the scene the remainder of the day and night to wet down the remains.

Coordinated mutual aid

The strategy used in combating the seven-hour ordeal was that of a well-coordinated mutual aid evolution among 11 neighboring companies. Portable radios were used by chief officers, and pump operators depended on pump-panel mikes to maintain constant communication, especially for the relay pumping.

The extensive relay pumping was hampered by the lack of largediameter hose. Age-old reliance on 2¹/₂-inch hose for supply lines is no longer practical. It is now apparent what 4-inch hose could have done to have kept the ladder truck supplied. From the time the state police fire marshal arrived on the scene, an intense investigation was conducted by state as well as local police and fire officials. As a result of evidence recovered at the scene and information received, three suspects were arrested and charged with burglary and arson at both Lake Elementary School and the summer cottage that was destroyed prior to the school fire.

Leaves are dangerous. They hide fissures in the earth that wait to swallow the innocent leaf raker. Do as I do. Stay inside. The leaves will do away eventually. It simply isn't worth the risk.

Consider the chill you must subject yourself to in order to rake leaves. You ran the constant rish of pneumonia and frost bite. Preserve your health at all costs.

Stave off that nasty fall leaf raking chill with some brandy while sitting in a cozy chair in a warm room. Place the chair by a window and watch the neighbors rake and wait to see if they fall into any fissures. Now that's practical.

Last bit of advice: never buy used things. You only inherit someone else's problem. Used items can be unreliable, and often times you can't get service. Buying used items just isn't practical.

Last bit of advice, part 2: never buy new things. You only inherit someone else's problem. Why do you think the manufacturer is so eager to be rid of the merchandise? Sure--he knows all the problems involved with new items. They take forever to break in, they can be unreliable, and often times you can't get service.

The only advantage to buying something new is THE GUARANTEE, which states quite clearly, "This guarantee not valid is case of breakdown or defect. Gaurantee expires one day prior to first malfunction.'

Examine the car industry. Take away parts and service and the industry collapses. Defects are built right into the cars. There's a department in charge of the defects. It makes sure the defects are properly varied and evenly spread. The department calls itself 'quality control," but it's the

BMPA corrects PUC hearing time

The Back Mountain Protective Asociation this week released new information about an informal hearing on a proposed UGI rate hike. The new date corrected an earlier statement by BMPA President Dr. F. Budd SChooley regarding the schedule for the public meeting.

Instead of convening at 10 a.m. as announced last week, the PUC "educational forum" for the public will meet only at 7 p.m. on Nov. 8. The session will be held at Kingston Middle School and be staffed by the PUC's Consumer Services Bureau. The first of the non-evidentiary hearings will take place beginning at 10 a.m. Nov. 14 at the Kingston Municipal Building with Administrative Law Judge Charles Hoffman.

An evidentiary hearing will then convene on Nov. 14 at 1 p.m. and another non-evidentiary hearing will occur that evening at 7 p.m.

Evidentiary hearings will continue Nov. 15 and 16 as needed, beginning each day at 10 a.m. All hearings except the Nov. 8 educational forum will take place at the Kingston Municipal Building. Under condiseration is an application from the UGI Corporation's Luzerne Electric Division to raise power rates by some $3.2 million. Schooley has urged local consumers of the utility to participate in the session.
