Dallas Jr. High students investigate Sockeye Salmon

Why are the seventh grade students holding spoons instead of pencils in Paul Warchal's life science classes at the Dallas Junior High.

It's because it is time to taste the Sockeye salmon, that's why!
In the students' study of fish, a particular species seemed to captivate the students' interest. This species was the sockeye salmon.

The students first read about the fish, and then viewed a film about the fish. After composing their own stories about the beautiful creature, it was finally time for the tasting.

How did the exercise work out? Students generally enjoyed the exciting experience. All day long Warchal's classroom was a festive fish haven. Many students were initially reluctant to follow through and taste a creature who had won their hearts as an academic friend, but in the long run, most braved to complete their study of the salmon with the personal tasting experience.

The complete salmon study is one part of the action curriculum underway at the school in the science department, in this case under the direction of Warchal.

Humanities Lectures held at Wilkes

Professor Olivia Ayres, Department of Languages and Literature at Wilkes College lectured on "Odysseus as Existential Hero," recently at the Dorothy Dickson

Darte Center for the Performing Arts.

The lecture was the first in a series of Humanities lectures to be presented by members of the Wilkes faculty sponsored by the Department of Languages and Literature in conjunction with the English Club and the Department of Philosophy.

Lectures will be open to the public and the college community at no charge. More information concerning the series may be obtained by calling Dr. R.M. Stewart, Department of Philosophy, Wilkes College.
