This nutritionist also loves to do the cooking

BY JOAN KINGSBURY

It's not surprising that Mary Reistetter, ARA director of food service in the Dallas School District, loves to cook. Her cooking experience began when she was nine years old. Mary's mother worked, so often Mary would prepare dinner after she got home from school. This early training in food preparation along with a nutrition course she took as a high school senior led Mary to her career in nutrition.

Originally from Binghamton, N.Y., Mary is a graduate of State University of New York with a bachelor's degree in dietetics. She obtained her master's degree in nutrition from Marywood College, Scranton. She is currently tking a business course in marketing at Wilkes College.

Prior to accepting the position as director of food service at Dallas, Mary served as assistant director of food service in the Scranton School District.

Mary finds her job challenging. In setting up the new cafeteria operation, Mary initiated the selective rainbow lunch at the junior and senior high school as well as the optional menu at the outlying elementary schools. She is willing to answer any questions concerning the cafeteria. her philosophy is that she can't do anything about a of it. A member of the Society of Nutrition Education, Northeast Dietetic Association and American Dietetic Association Mary will present a talk show on radio station WARD in March focusing on a refresher course in nutrition for adults.

Mary enjoys swimming, jogging, aerobic dancing and skiing as well as sewing. A plant enthusiast, she credits her job in

During her college years Mary worked in a bakery. She is very pleased with the fact that the cafeteria staff does all their own baking this year. Mary enjoys baking Slovak recipes handed down by her grandmother, preparing quiches and souffles and experimenting with vegetable dishes.

Mary has agreed to share four of her favorite recipes with Post readers 1 t. cinnamon

Emergency food pays off

The recent campaign for emergency food and fuel assitance, conducted by the Martin Luther King Committee for Social Justice has produced some results. To date, about $6,500 has been collected from area churches with many congregation pledges still outstanding.

Rev. Stewart Pierson, splkesman for the committee said he is still confident that the church members can reach their goal of over $20,000 for use in meeting the emergency fuel needs in this com-

Encouraging reports from the CEO warehouse are also optimistic regarding the collection of canned goods to meet emergency food needs.

The Commission On Economic Opportunity, was identified as the distribution mechanism for the effort because of the long relation ship it has with the religious community and its proven ability to respond quickly to human needs.
