Trout Unlimited Project

Tannery floor helps preserve Bowman's Creek fishing

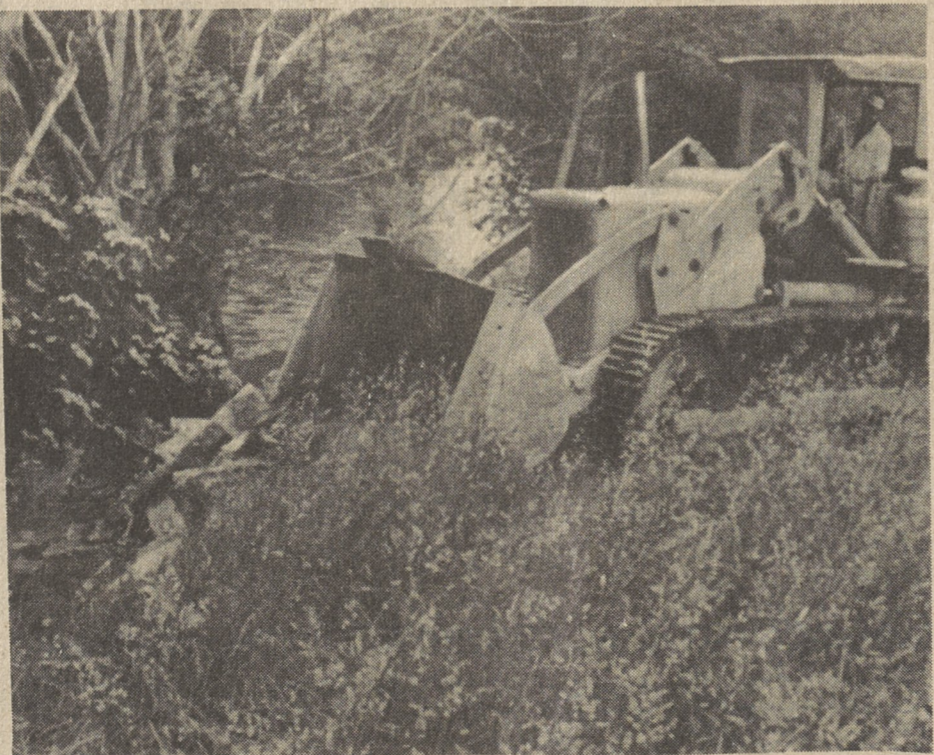

Noxen Tannery continues to serve the community even in its dismantling. Thanks to the local chapter of a national conservation association, the Pennsylvania Fish Commission and a local contractor, tons of concrete debris from the former tannery will prevent erosion along the fly-fishing stretch of Bowman's Creek.

The Endless Mountains Chapter of Trout Unlimited provided the money to pay for hauling concrete sections from the tannery's floor and foundation to be used in the bank repair project. The Noxen Tannery was torn down last spring. The project was one in a series carried out along Bowman's Creek by Trout Unlimited as part of the Fish Commissions "Adopt-A-Stream" program. The group adopted the Bowman's Creek project in 1975 when they formed. Members raise funds for stream improvements through the sponsorship of fly-tying and rod-building classes and an annual raffle.

Steve Shabbick, waterways patrolman for Wyoming County, conceived the latest operation when he saw trucks hauling material from the tannery demolition site.

Both Shabbick and Trout Unlimited members had been concerned for several years about erosion along the farm property of James Brodie. Each spring, high water took a little more of the bank in an area along Route 29 near the intersection with Route 292. While fishing was not yet affected, the hole in the bank was quite severe, explained Trout Unlimited secretary Richard Mills of Lehman. Appeals to the Soil Conservation of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources had gone unanswered and members believed that a valuable fishing area would be lost.

HEAVY EQUIPMENT from John Connolly and Sons of Luzerne places concrete debris from the dismantled Noxen Tannery floor into a streamside hole along Bowman's Creek.

Shabbick organized the project. He contacted offices of Trout Unlimited and the contracting firm, John Connolly and Sons of Luzerne, and told them about his idea.

The conservation organization agreed to pay for the hauling and the contractor began dumping fill at the streamside where it was put in place under the supervision of Shabbick and Trout Unlimited members. "It was a massive job," said Mills.

BERTI & SON

Probably the most unappreciated member of any community is the local refuse collectors. When the service is good, which is what firms such as BERTI & SON go out of their way to provide, there is little thanks.

But the facts are that a good refuse collection and container service, despite its lack of recognition, is vital to any community.

Located at 44 Franklin in Dallas, phone 675-0640, this firm offers weekly or monthly pick-up service for homes, apartments and businesses. The employees won't leave a trail of tin cans from your home to the street.

The containers come in a variety of sizes and aren't permitted to overflow or become rodent-infested - thus becoming a health hazard.

So don't let anyone give you any trash about who has the best collection service in Dallas. Rely on BERTI & SON. You'll be glad you did.

Covered dish dinner

A covered dish dinner was held by the Daniel C. Roberts Fire Company and its Ladies Auxiliary on Monday, Sept. 13, to thank the members who worked so hard to make the annual fair the most successful ever.

Jim Ward presided and gave a report on the fair. Co-chairpersons of the event were Mrs. Ret Nelson and Ed Sicler.

Both the fire company and the ladies auxiliary held business meetings following the dinner to plan for the coming year.

The group had to include DER in its planning, as well as State Fisheries Management people. Within four days in mid-July the bank was secured.

Shabbick believes the bank is now stabilized and he predicts many more years of successful fishing in the area in the popular trout stream.

Endless Mountain Chapter of Trout Unlimited has contributed both time and money to improve fishing in the waters of Bowman's Creek.

In several locations, members have built ripraps to stabilize banks and have planted hundreds of willow seedlings to hold bank soil. The group also has introduced more than 100,000 brown trout fingerlings into the stream. These were purchased through the Sugar Hollow Hatchery, allowed to hatch and set free into the waters in a program spanning three years.

The local chapter of Trout Unlimited is one of 250 in the United States.
