This unidentified Dallas basketball player looks like he is head and shoulders above everyone else on the court. Actually, he is midway between grabbing a rebound and coming down to the hardwood.

Gimme that ball

Ed Gorey of Dallas looks a little mad here, but actually he has just won a battle for a rebound against Seton Catholic's Tom Finnan. The two teams met last Friday in Wyoming Valley Conference basketball action.

These tips make ice fishing more enjoyable

With "Old Man Winter" now in full command of air and water temperatures, Keystone state anglers are donning their hooded parkas, fur-lined gloves and boots and heading for their favorite lake or pond for a little hardwater fishing.

And ice fishing is growing in popularity. From panfish and trout to yellow perch, bass and muskies, the Keystone state angler can never be sure what he will pull from beneath the frozen water. However, he is almost certain to find good action.

According to Ralph W. Abele, executive director, the Fish Commission has been busy preparing for the winter fishing season. Its great white fleet has been on the move - carrying more than 141,000 trout to 62 lakes in 43 counties during November and December, an many of the lakes have been stocked within the past several weeks.

But despite the recent frigid temperatures, fishermen are urged to check ice conditions before venturing on their favorite lake or pond. At least four or more inches of clear, blue ice is considered safe for fishing.

In addition to making sure the ice is safe, the Commission recommends that ice fishermen dress as warmly as possible. Begin with thermal underwear two pairs of socks, a wool shirt or sweater. Cover your hands with gloves or mittens and protect your feet with felt-lined boots with rubber bottoms and either rubber or leather uppers. It's a good idea to dress in layers. You can always remove excess clothing, but don't use constricting belts that cut down on blood circulation. By impairing your circulation they can actually make you colder.

Ice fishermen do not need a lot of equipment to catch fish through the ice and many anglers make their own. One of the most important pieces of equipment is the device used to make the hole - whether it is a spud bar or a power-operated ice auger. An ice dipper or skimmer is also useful to clean chip ice and slush from the holes. Tip-ups and jigging rods are the two most popular fishing devices.

Fish Commission regional offices report safe ice throughout the state on most of the smaller lakes and ponds.

Northcentral Regional Law Enforcement Supervisor Paul Swanson said all of the lakes in his region north of Rt. 80 had safe ice. Some traditional hotspots include Lyman Lake in Potter County, Kettle Creek Lake in Clinton County, Little Pine Dam in Lycoming County, Ridgway Lake in Elk County and Parker Dam in Clearfield County.

Cloyd Hollen, assistant supervisor in the northwest, said he received reports of good ice fishing at Lake Wilhelm in Mercer County and Tamarack Lake in Crawford County. Lake Pleasant in Erie County is also a good bet for trout.

Robert Perry, assistant supervisor in the northeast region, said most of his "lakes up to 100 acres have safe ice, but larger lakes and ponds are still thin in the middle. Perry cites Lake Winola in Wyoming County and Frances Slocum Dam in Luzerne County as good bets.

The Southcentral Region reported that both Opossum and Laurel Lakes in Cumberland County had safe ice and both were recently stocked with trout.

Anglers are having success on Speedwell Forge Lake in the Southeast Region, and although safe ice reports were not available on any other waters in the region, traditional hotspots include Blue Marsh Lake, Marsh Creek Lake and Ontelaunee Lake.

Southwest Regional Supervisor Tom Qualters reports good catches of northern pike from Lake Somerset and panfish from High Point Lake in Somerset County. He said most of the smaller lakes in the area have safe ice but urges fishermen to use caution. Good trout bets in the area include Laurel Hill Lake in Somerset County and Lake Rowena and Duman Dam in Cambria County.

Anglers are reminded that the new 1984 fishing licenses are required beginning January 1 and that the limit on trout during the extended season remains three per day (combined species).

Fishermen are urged to contact the waterways patrolmen or Fish Commission regional law enforcement officer concerning ice conditions. Their names and telephone numbers are contained in the Summary of Fishing Regulations that each angler receives when he buys his fishing license. State park superintendents are another good source of information if you plan to fish a state park lake.

For more detailed information on equipment, bait, and ice angling tips, fishermen are urged to obtain a free copy of "Pennsylvania's Ice Fishing" by sending a stamped, self-addressed, legal-sized envelope to the Pennsylvania Fish Commission, Office of Information, Department IF, P.O. Box 1673, Harrisburg, PA 17105-1673.

Gorey for two

Ed Gorey of the Dallas High School basketball team lets a shot go in last Friday's game against Seton Catholic. Gorey scored a game-high 22 points to lead the Mountaineers past Seton, 77-46. Looking on is Dallas' Dave Thomas (No. 34).

Up for grabs

The basketball is up for grabs as members of the Dallas and Seton Catholic basketball teams fight for a rebound. Seton's Ed Zavrotny (No. 22) battles Dallas' Ed Gorey (No. 44) while Greg Manusky (No. 42) and Steve Wilson (No. 10) of Dallas look on. Pat Gibbons (No. 21) of Seton is shown in the background. Action was in last Friday's Wyoming Valley Conference game.
