circulate petitions against the project. Andy Kachmar of North Lehigh Street has been taking pictures and Mike Case of Division Street, a Wilkes College Environmental Science professor, testified as to facts and figures at the meeting. Susan Merrill of Shaver Avenue made copies of the official meeting notice for wider distribution tion.

Louise Adamchick of Hazeltine Street summed up why so many people are working so hard. "We want to keep this a nice neighborhood," she said. "I have three teenagers and I want to keep it nice so they can raise their families here too."

One of the strongest assets this group has going for it is its ability to continually ask constructive questions, some of which could possible affect the decision as to whether or not the development will be built.

Among the questions they have raised are: Why are there no planned playground facilities for the children in the project? Is there any assurance that the project won't be changed to low income in the years to come? What is the price of the land? What will the taxes be? Who will pay for the increased fire and police protection? What about school taxes? Will the private wells that many of them have paid to have installed be affected? What about increased traffic on narrow winding streets without sidewalks? Will the DAMA sewage plant be able to handle an increase in population? Will there be an increase in crime and a decrease in their property values? What about environmental concerns regarding streams on the property?

Some additional questions from the group were answered by Kingston Township Manager Mark Kunkle

According to Kunkle, the apartments will cost from $200 to $350 and are for people in the $12,000 to $22,000 annual income bracket. The land was originally owned by Mrs. Landis' father Granville Sowden. The units will be frame with brick fronts and vinyl aluminum siding and Smith Miller Associats' figure shows the building site to be 5.06 acres. The maximum number of units that could legally be built on that acreage is 60, however, the developers say there will only be 38 units.

The Kingston Township Road Department removed galvanized pipes from the site last week after a resident complained about the eye sore and the Farmers' Home Association has guaranteed a subsidized low interest loan under the Section 515 Program. The rent, however, will not be subsidized.

The official Kingston Township proceedings, also according to Kunkle, call for another Planning Commission meeting to be held at an undecided date. At that time, the commission will announce its recommendation, but no testimony will

The final step will be a meeting of the Kingston Township Board of Supervisors where additional testimony from residents will be heard prior to the supervisors making the final decision.
