PG&W beefs up security

Pennsylvania Gas and Water Company (PG&W) says it is augmenting its own security force patrols of reservoir areas with private service security personnel. Gerald B. Taylor, vice-president of operations and engineering, said the beef-up in security normally occurs this time each year as the weather warms up and people look for recreational outlets. Taylor said prosecution against trespassers will be strictly enforced and that PG&W will seek maximum fines and penalties against anyone trespassing on reservoir lands. He added that people activities at Lake Scranton are restricted to the paved pathways only. He repeated the company's earlier warnings on the ban of pets at Lake Scranton saying the area is clearly marked forbidding pets.

Youth summer jobs available

The Luzerne County Board of Commissioners, Prime Sponsors for the local Job Training Partnership Act program, announces that the annual Summer Youth Employment Training Program (SYETP) will be conducted this year from June 15 through August 24. Administering the program is the Luzerne County Human Resources Development Department. According to James J. Loftus, Executive Director, 900 County residents, most of whom will be in the 16 to 21 year age group, will be given employment opportunities at selected public and non-profit agencies throughout the County. Funding allocations for this year's program is set at $1,137,643, down from the 1983 level of $1,539,380. Those County residents who qualify for employment, under strict federal income guidelines, will be eligible for up to 300 hours of program work participation. Some 14 to 15 year old residents with bonafide handicaps will also be included in this year's program.

Participating worksites must provide supervision, meaningful employment opportunities and meet other federal and program requirements contained in the worksite agreement.

Program openings do exist and interested youth should immediately contact their nearest PA Office of Employment Security or their School Guidance Counselor.

Religious Sisters of Mercy display works of art

Over 65 selections of art work created by Religious Sisters of Mercy located throughout the United States will be exhibited at College Misericordia June 8 to 10, in The Art Gallery. Oil paintings, water colors, batiks and sculptures, photography and jewelry are a few of the pieces that have been sent to College Misericordia from as far as California.

The exhibit is part of the 1984 Mercy Higher Education Colloquium

(MHEC) conference that will be held at Misericordia this weekend. Judging of the art pieces took place on Saturday and an award for the "best in show" was presented to Sister Joan Zehnder, RSM, of Louisville, Kentucky, for her oil painting entitled "Emersion Emergence."

Other awards presented Saturday evening at an Awards Dinner included first place to Sister Serena Yuriko Tanaka, RSM, of Charlotte, North Carolina, for her pencil-pastel titled "Orizuro"; second place to Sister Regina Kiel, RSM, of Dallas, for a ring; and third place to Sister Dorothy McLaughlin, RSM, of Scranton, for a life-size wood carving of a head entitled "Mother of Sorrows."

The Mercy Higher Education Colloquium is sponsoring its 10th annual conference. Founded in Cincinnati in 1974, the Colloquium has Sisters of Mercy members throughout the United States, Canada, Central and South America. According to Dr. Regina Kelly, executive director of MHEC and professor of English at Misericordia, more than 100 members, representing the 19

Mercy Colleges will attend this year's conference. The theme for the 1984 gathering is "The Imagination in Education" with the keynote address by Sister Aquin O'Neill, Baltimore, associate professor of Theology at Salve Regina College in Newport, Rhode Island. Sister O'Neill will discuss "Revealing the Truth: The Teacher as Active Imaginator." A Ph.D. from Vanderbilt University in Systematic Theology, Sister O'Neill has authored articles for the New Catholic Encyclopedia and for the Catholic Theology Society. She is a member of the Southern Baptist-Roman Catholic dialogue and has lectured on Women in Ministry, the Future of the Missionary Church, Personality Types and the Spiritual Life.

The Mercy Higher Education Leadership Medal will be awarded to Sister Magdala Thompson, RSM, Baltimore, for consideration of her activity in higher education over a significant period of time, as well as her important contributions to research, publications, program development and administration. Sister Thompson holds a master
