Little League — fun for all ages!

Beth Finn of the Braves in the Senior Softball League takes a nice swing at a pitch during last week's game against Northwest. The Braves trounced Northwest, 29-2.

Pam Coolbaugh stirs up some dust as she slides into home plate to score a run for the Braves despite a galliant effort by Northwest catcher Sue Reider to tag the runner out.

Pam Coolbaugh makes getting to third base look a little easier than she did getting to home plate. Here, Pam makes her way to third base in plenty of time while Northwest third baseman Lori Kingsbury makes a late tag.

Even mothers get into the act at the Back Mountain Little League. Here, Taffy Shottwell checks the pizza oven while volunteering her time to work in the refreshment stand.

Who is that masked man? Why, it's none other than Arno Miller. The Dallas Post photographer caught Arno last week as he played the role of the home-plate umpire during a Little League game.

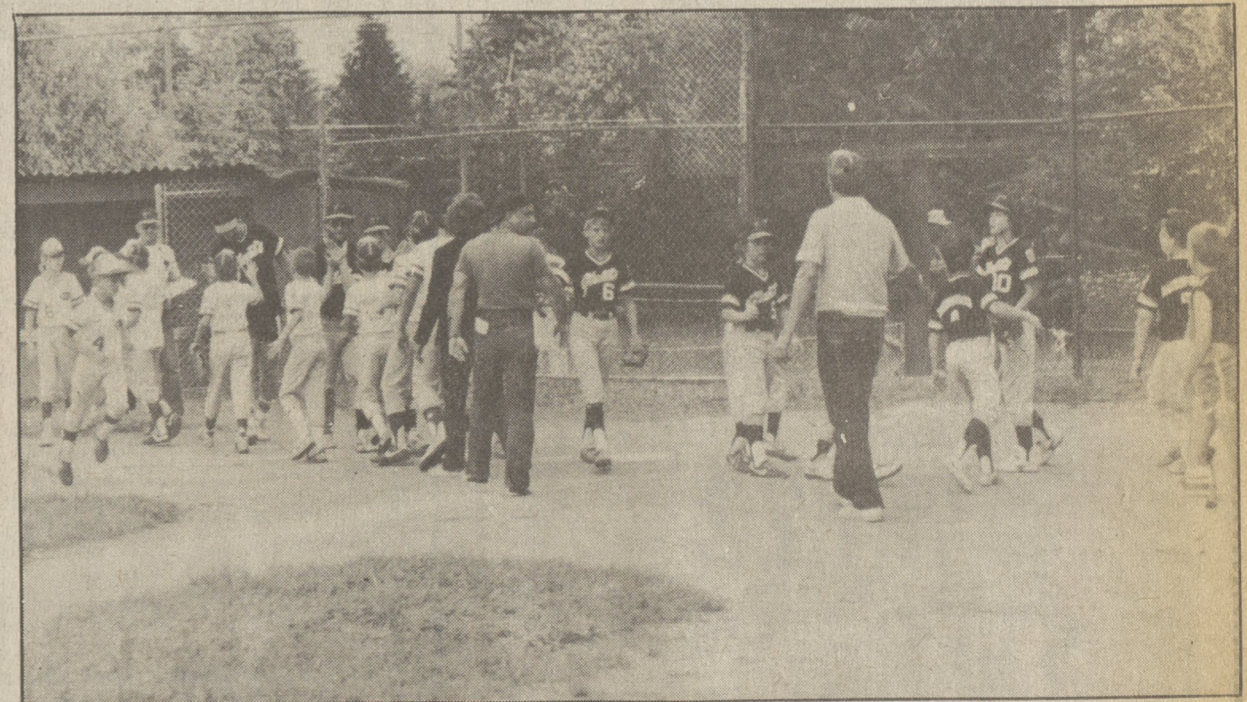

Danny Lasinski is shown here as he displays his pitching style. Danny is a member of the Giants team in the Back Mountain Little League and was captured in action during a game held last week.

Although the bleachers may look a little sparse in this photo, there are fans at every game held at the Back Mountain Little League. And those fans are almost as enthusiastic as the players and coaches themselves.

Members of the Giants and Reds teams of the Back Mountain Little League show their sportsmanship as they shake hands following a game between the two Minor League teams last week. The Reds squeaked by the Giants in that game by a score of 4-3.
