Tours

THE WILKES-BARRE/SCRANTON AIRPORT just isn't a place to catch a flight. People love to tour the Wilkes-Barre-Scranton International Airport and this is the season for it. Thousands of visitors come to the airport while on class trips and tours. In the last five months alone over 1500 persons have toured the facilities and 2000 more are expected before the end of the year.

Upon arrival at the airport, the airport tour guide will show you around the ground floor of terminal building, which includes touring US Air, Henson, Freedom Eastern and Allegheny Commuter Airlines ticketing areas. Also on the ground floor is the security area where visitors can go through and actually be screened just like passengers.

Upstairs there is the National Weather Bureau and the FAA tower which can be toured if prior arrangement is made with the tour director and the time is suitable for those departments. Also on the second floor is the observations deck where visitor can observe airport operations and aircraft landings.

Back on the ground again the tour continues on to the firehouse. The airport has four trucks and several men skilled in emergency procedures.

If enough advance notice is given and an aircraft is on the ground it may even be possible for the group to tour that aircraft.

These tours are free of charge and open to any group. If your group is interested in touring the airport and you would like to find out what times are available please contact the tour director at the Airport Director's office at 655-3077 or 457-6560.
