It seems several readers of The Dallas Post had a great time trying to remember back far enough that they could identify the location of the photo which appeared in last week's Remembering Column on page four.

What we have learned is that the photo, which was identified only as State Street in Dallas, is a photo of what is now known as Lake Street. The section of that street which appears in last week's photo is the area where Commonwealth Telephone Company is currently located.

Clarence Elston of Old Lake Street in Dallas was the first to call last Wednesday to identify the photo. Mr. Elston claims the photo was probably taken around 1917 and that State Street was later known as the Harveys Lake Highway. Mr. Elston said Philip Raub was the owner of the home seen in the left of the photo.

Josephine Matenus of Fernbrook called and identified the photo as the area where the telephone company building is located. Josephine remembers being in that house seen in the left of the photo and spoke of a laundry chute in the house. Madeline Parrish also called to verify the location of the photo.

Robert Hislop called to tell us he remembers rolling down Lake Street in tires. He also confirmed that the house in the left of the photo belongs to the Raub Family who used to own the Raub Hotel in downtown Dallas.

Doris Kitchen of Lower Demunds Road in Dallas told us that after the Raub family moved from that home on the left the Kear family moved in.

Doris was also kind enough to compliment us on a photo that we published last week, showing the intersection of Lower Demunds Road and Roushey Street where Kingston Township Police Officer Ralph Seltzer was run down by a juvenile driver last Sunday night. That photo was taken by George Poynton and not by Ed Campbell as was reported in last week's issue.

Claire Kuehn of Dallas also called to point out that the Commonwealth Telephone Company building is now located in the empty field seen in the photo. It was Claire who loaned us the photo which was included in a packet of old photos she brought to our office several weeks ago.

Ernest W. Wood of Rice Street in Dallas, identified the house on the left as that of the Beaver family. Ernest also said the field where the telephone company building is now located was once the sight of a house belonging to Devan's, a family who owned a feed mill at one time.

Much thanks to everyone who called to clear up our mystery photo.
