Day care info available

Rep. Frank Coslett said today that information for parents selecting a day-care program for their children is available at his district office.

Coslett said a limited number of copies of "A Day-Care Checklist of Choosing a Program," published by the Pennsylvania Commission for Women, may be obtained at his district office, 1265 Wyoming Ave., Forty Fort. The telephone number is 288-3990.

The commission compiled the checklist in cooperation with the departments of Public Welfare and Education.

"With the ever-growing number of families where both parents work or single-parent families, there is an increased need for day-care," Coslett said. "I believe this checklist would be a great help to anyone in need of such a program."

The checklist includes sample questions that parents can ask while visiting a day-care center, and some they should ask themselves before selecting a program. There are also tips on making the transition to day-care smooth for child and parents, and on keeping day-care a part of the total family experience.
