Nonno Lini's is a restaurant of four generations

By PAMELA AARON
 Staff Correspondent

Nestled in the hilly regions of Northern Italy that ascend to the heart of the rural province of Perugia, lies the tiny village of Annafodi Foligno — a place where family recipes are as old and as cherished as the view of the surrounding mountain ranges.

This was the home of Nonno (grandfather) Lini. Four generations later, one can still savor the old world magic of traditional North Italian fare at Nonno Lini's in Wilkes-Barre, by way of Nonno Lini's great grandson, Richard and his chef (and wife), Mary Theresa.

For Mary Theresa, the preparation of fine food is a passion that has been "in her blood" for as long as she can remember. Though educated in business administration, Mary Theresa claims that cooking has remained her first love. She trained under Peter Macheska, a veteran chef with 30 years experience, and speaks warmly of his expertise and patience.
