Penox notes record sales

Penox Technologies Incorporated, the privately held medical equipment manufacturer, achieved record sales in excess of $1 million in March, according to Penox President, Larry Hohol.

Penox, headquartered in Pittston, in reaching this sales volume, exceeded its planned growth rate for the fiscal period just ended.

"Sales for March, the company's first $1 million month, showed a continuation of the dynamic growth pattern established shortly after our inception in 1982," said Hohol.

THE DALLAS POST Salutes DESIGNED SECURITY SYSTEMS

By PAMELA AARON
Staff Correspondent

It's 12 p.m. on a humid, July evening. A two story Tudor rests quietly on a wooded hill overlooking the outskirts of a small, rural town.

One street lamp provides only a fog-like iridescence around the property. Slowly, a shadow materializes near the trees; growing still-like legs as it weaves back and forth across the flagstone walkway. One soft knock to a window...no alarm...everything remains still.

One quick turn and several short steps later and the confident fingers are reaching toward the window ledge when suddenly...a beam of light flashes out upon an astonished face and a siren begins howling with earsplitting intensity. Our prowler leaps from the window, fleeing toward the woods, only to spot a squad car turning down the embankment in pursuit.

The crime? Attempted robbery. The place? Your neighborhood. The system? Seismic Detection. It picks up shock waves of movement.

"It's the best system ever designed," says Leo Stanislow, owner of Designed Security Systems.

The unit is programmed not only for sensitivity, but for "count" as well. Often a problem arises with other systems in their ability to discriminate between ordinary movements and movements occurring during a break-in; false alarms are a big problem. One pebble thrown to a window may set off an alarm in an ordinary system, whereas with the computerized count mode, this will not happen.

Our thief, for example, was unaware that his second knock, not his first, was going to set off the system. The unit is virtually fool-proof, in this sense.

Leo guarantees all his systems for accuracy and dependability and he clearly has a lot of fun designing specialized protection for each of his customers. The one time engineer takes his work seriously, pursuing the best possible protection plan for a particular property, as so many pieces of an intricate puzzle.

"No design is the same," claims Leo. "As no property is the same, each system must be worked out for total protection of that particular location, as each will have its particular circumstances. I never 'skimp' in this area. I've worked in this field long enough to know that you can't without encountering problems later on down the road. If I can't do a particular job the way it needs to be done, I don't do it at all."

When Leo's designs are complete, one will have total reliability, no visibility (no wires will show) as well as a 100 percent guarantee for total perimeter protection. Few companies are able to achieve this end without exorbitant fees; but Leo manages.

"Unfortunately, most people come to us after a major break in," quips MaryAnn, Leo's softspoken wife and the right hand of the business. "It's always such a shame that the public has little knowledge of these systems until something tragic occurs."

Looking across the table at her husband, who is busy setting up a demonstrator box that he built himself, she says, "Leo's always been thorough in everything he does - when he encounters a problem he'll spend hours working it out until it's right. He takes things apart and puts them back together; studies each little thing. He's always loved to understand how everything works. I can honestly say that we've had no complaints or problems without any of his designs."

The main switch boxes have computerized code control, to prevent inactivation of the system by unauthorized persons. The boxes themselves remain identical; having a two year warranty for parts and labor, as well as lightening.

A further area of interest for the Stanislows is the broadcasting, Satellite Dish.

Most of Leo's work is done outside, explaining crime prevention and designing and implementing his ideas. His office is located in his home at 53 Powderhorn Drive in Dallas, where he resides with wife, MaryAnn and his three sons, Cory, 6, who attends kindergarten at Dallas Elementary; Michael, 3 and Greg, 2.

The couple have been residents of the area all of their lives. You can contact Designed Security Systems by phoning 675-2899.
