DEAR "AUNT PATTY"

DEAR AUNT PATTY:

I started working last fall for the first time since getting married eight years ago. I have one week of vacation this year. Always in the past we went camping for two weeks because my husband loves to fish, swim and hike. I always had a good time, but I don't want to spend my five day vacation planning meals, packing, cooking, cleaning, fishing and doing a ton of laundry when I get back.

I think that since I'm working and contributing to the vacation money, I should have more say about where we go. I work hard all year and I'd like a relaxing vacation with meals in restaurants and no beds to make. Am I being unfair?

My husband is a salesman who travels all the time, stays in nice hotels, and eats in restaurants four or five days a week. He's sick of it and doesn't want the same thing for a vacation. What should we do?

CAMPERS WIFE

DEAR CAMPERS WIFE: You should compromise and look for a resort with home cooked meals, maid service, fishing, swimming, and hiking available. Otherwise you should consider separate vacations!

DEAR AUNT PATTY:

School was out last week. I'm 13 years old and am bored already. What is there to do around here to have some fun?

BORED

DEAR BORED:

Go to the library and find some good books to read. You may even want to volunteer to work in the library. Take walks to places you have never been. Buy some seed and experiment growing some plants or vegetables. Start now to plan your wardrobe for school in the fall. Wash the family car on a regular basis in return for a ride to a state park for the day. Clean your room and even offer to paint it for a real change. Plan and start an exercise program. Invite a friend over and camp out in the back yard. Fun doesn't have to be expensive. Use your imagination.
