Coslett has passport books

Rep. Frank Coslett said today that copies of a pocket-sized "Medication Passport" are available free to senior citizens at pharmacies throughout the state.

The lawmaker said the booklets, produced by Pennsylvania Blue Shield, are part of a statewide drug education program aimed at helping to prevent senior citizens from misusing prescription drugs.

He said the booklets may also be obtained at his district office at 1265 Wyoming Ave., Forty-Fort, PA

The drug education program includes programs to train local service providers to inform older people about drug misuse, distribution of the "Medication Passport" and providing physicians with a self-study, university-accredited course on elderly-related diseases and effective medications.

Coslett said the booklets may be used by older persons to record prescriptions, dosage and other medical instructions from their doctors and pharmacists.

The Family of the late RITA (Nafus) McCUEN wishes to thank all who assisted in any way during its recent bereavement, also those who sent flowers, cards, food & loaned cars.

Pointing to home

Frances Slocum State Park Ranger Wilmer Fox points to the area where beavers have made their home at the park.

Beavers take over portion of park

By JOHN F. KILDUFF Staff Writer

A five to seven acre section of land at Frances Slocum State Park has become the permanent camping grounds for a very persistent, and sometimes pesky, beaver colony park officials told The Post. For the past four years, the beavers have been building and rebuilding a dam along the stream running through the park and beneath Mount Olivet Road near Green Road. Park officials say that sometimes the dam can create hazards for land owners and motorists traveling along Mount Olivet Road.

"Last winter (February 1985) the beavers had the water dammed up to within six inches of the road at Mount Olivet, Green Road intersection," said park ranger Wilmer Fox. "We had to had to break open the dam a little, so the water wouldn't spill over and freeze on the road." Fox, a 12-year veteran ranger from Centermorland, said that in addition to the five to seven acre parcel of land, which the beavers beavers'," Fox joked. have water backed up onto, they have built seven other dams inside the park grounds. The seven other dams are no real problem, Fox said, because they are away from the general public and private property.

"If they (beavers) build a dam next to a farm of road," Fox said, "it could be a problem. As long as you can control them, they are actually the best conservationists you will ever find.'

Fox said that the backed-up water has actually provided excellent habitat for deer and duck wildlife.

Park officials have repeatedly broken open the dam in order to keep the water level down, but the beavers have rebuilt the dam as fast as they can break it open.

'There is nothing worse then trying to tear one of these (beaver dams) apart," said Fox. "They are built very well. Once they get build-

Fox says the beavers build the dams due to their natural instincts, rather than for any destructive purpose. The construction of the dam involves mixing a variety of natural elements like tree branches, large stones, leaves and mud from the waterway. The dams can be very large and consist of many tons of mud and branches. "They build for natural reasons," Fox said. "People think they are engineers. Not at all, " Fox said. "It is a natural instinct to build

Fox said the beavers dam up the water in order to have a place to survive for the winter months. Beavers spend most of their lives in and around water and can't allow the water level to become shallow or it will freeze. The beavers reportedly store food and pockets of air just under the surface of the ice during
