hat to do in case a tornado alert

With the unusual amount of tornado activity in Pennsylvania this summer, Luzerne County Emergency Management Agency wants county residents to know what to do in case of a tornado alert.

A tornado is one of nature's most destructive forces. As many residents of Northwestern and Central Pennsylvania can attest, it gives little or no warning as it sweeps down from the sky, destroying everything in its path. The National Weather Service will issue a "Tornado Watch" if climatic conditions are such that tornadoes are possible. People in the affected area may proceed with their customary routines, but they should watch for threatening weather and listen to their radio for updated weather information.

"Tornado Warnings" are issued by the National Weather Service when a tornado actually has been sighted on radar or by a group spotter in the vicinity. When warning is received, persons close to the storm should take cover immediately. Because of the erratic nature of tornadoes, there is often very little time.

At home, residents should go to the basement or to an interior room on the lowest level. Stay away from windows. If possible, grab a mattress or heavy blanket to protect yourself from flying debris.

If you are driving in a vehicle when the warning sounds, or reside in a mobile home, leave them and go to the nearest shelter. If none is nearby, lie flat in the nearest distch or depression, shielding your head. Larger buildings, such as offices or schools, usually have pre-designated shelter areas. Interior hallways on the lowest floor provide the best shelter.

Shopping centers, with their large flat roofs, are quite danterous. It is better to leave such an area and seek better shelter if possible.

Tornadoes occur in any month, in all 50 of the United States. The largest number of twisters occur in the central plains, but Pennsylvania has had its share also.

The first records tornado in Pennsylvania occurred in Bradford County on Aug. 10, 1854. Since that time, more than 400 tornadoes have struck the commonwealth. The most destructive series of tornadoes to strike Pennsylvania occurred May 31 this year, when 65 persons died as five separate tracks of tornadoes swept through the state.

Records show the frequency of tornado occurrance in Pennsylvania gradually builds to a peak in June. A summer plateau of activity is maintained through August, followed by an abrupt drop in frequency in the Autumn.

firms who have chosen to locate in other parts of the country. Although some of these firms have branches in Northeastern Pennsylvania, for the most part, it is the small and medium-sized businesses who are adding jobs to Northeastern Pennsylvania's landscape, more so than any other factor.

As far as public service institutions and government are concerned, Pennsylvania enjoys the reputation of having more local governments than any other state except Illinois. Our public service, non-profit institutions encompas the regional landscape and provide all the services which are generally accepted in major metropolitan areas, and if such a service is not available within the region, it is usually available close by in a nearby metropolitan area.

Northeastern Pennsylvania is the right size metropolitan area to accommodate growth in the future. While this is not a new factor, recognition that the region is a metropolitan area of significance and has the ability to innovate and continue to be entrepreneurial in its economic base needs to be publicized and promoted.
