First Eastern offers Fidelity mutual funds

First Eastern Bank has announced that a selection of Fidelity mutual funds are now available to investors through the bank's Discount Brokerage Department.

Cars to have rear lights now

You're going to see more and more cars on the highway this fall sporting an additional safety feature — an eye-level rear brake light that will reduce the danger of rear-end collisions.

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who has made safety her number one priority, said, "We expect to cut the number of rear-end collisions significantly, eliminate some 40,000 injuries and save annually an estimated $434 million in property damages once all vehicles on the road are equipped with the third lamp."

Cars manufactured after Sept. 1, 1985, will be required to have the new rear stop lamp, which will supplement the two lower brake lights. The regulation requires the third stop lamp to be mounted on the centerline of a vehicle, between the trunk and the top of the roof, either inside or outside the rear window.

Fidelity Investments is one of America's largest, most successful, privately-owned investment management organizations. The five funds now available through First Eastern Discount Brokerage are: Fidelity Magellan fund, Fidelity Mercury Fund, Fidelity Select Portfolios, Fidelity Equity-Income Fund, and Fidelity Tax-Exempt Market Trust.

The addition of Fidelity mutual funds complements First Eastern's existing full line of discount brokerage services. First Eastern Discount Brokerage provides clients with an online entry system to transmit buy or sell orders on stocks, bonds, equity and index options, and provides margin trading.

In addition, clients can obtain up-to-the-minute stock, bond and option quotes as well as market and investment research information.

First Eastern Bank's Discount Brokerage Department, a part of the Investment Department, remains the only full service discount brokerage operation in north-eastern Pennsylvania.

'House Calls' in Back Mountain

By JOHN F. KILDUFF
Staff Writer

There is a new concept in health care invading the Back Mountain area. Actually, it is not exactly an entirely "new concept", it is an old idea returning after a quarter of a century of sick leave.

The new concept? In-home Health Care, offered by the newly opened "House Calls," in-home health care agency located in the Dallas Corners Building, Dallas.

House Calls opened its doors this past January in an effort to "bridge the gap" between the time a patient leaves a hospital and the time the patient is home-bound during recuperation.

"It is not an entirely new idea of health care," said Registered Nurse Pamela Morgantini, who is also House Calls' Director of Professional Services. "In-Home health care has been around for about 70 years."

According to Morgantini, the idea of medical personnel visiting a patient at his or her home, following a hospital stay, evolved many decades ago.

"The idea evolved from visiting nurses of 20 to 25 years ago," Morgantini, a 1977 nursing graduate of Luzerne County Community College, said. "Those visiting nurses did everything they could for a patient."

House Calls currently offers in-home services including skilled nursing, physical therapy, speech therapy, respiratory therapy, nutritional counseling, blood testing, EKG's, arterial blood gases testing and X-ray services. All services are covered by Medicare, Medicaid, Workman's compensation and any other private insurance a patient may have.

PAMELA MORGANTINI

One of the main reasons for the need of In-Home care has been the recent implementation of Diagnostic Related Groups (DRGs) by hospitals locally and around the country. DRGs essentially categorize hospital patients into general diagnostic groups, which stipulate the number of days a patient is permitted to remain in a hospital. Under the DRG system a patient is often times released from the hospital even though they may need additional care. That is where "House Calls" comes in to help.

"Many times patients are discharged from hospitals before they should be," said Morgantini. "Today's patients are sicker when they leave hospitals than they should be."

"It is a real shame as to what is happening to the elderly in this country right now," Morgantini said. "I really love the elderly and my work and that is why I try to do what I can in this business."

Morgantini said House Calls is not an alternative to physicians but rather is a supplement to their care.

"We are not replacing the physician. We are bridging the gap," Morgantini said.

For example, Morgantini explained, there could be a home-bound patient in the middle of the winter season who is in need of an insulin injection. Instead of a patient attempting to brave the cold and slippery roads to get to a hospital, House Calls could send a nurse to the patient's home to administer the injection.

"We try to look at the whole patient to determine their needs," Morgantini said. "We (House Calls) sometimes go out on a limb for the patient. We try to meet every patient need we can."

According to Morgantini, the DRG system has warranted the In-Home health care system and most people don't realize how frightening being home-bound can be.

"When a patient is released from a hospital and he or she is not ready to go, they are often overwhelmed," said Morgantini. "We must realize that someday that patient (who is released early) could be you. And that is why we are here," Morgantini continued. "We are trying to make a difference in the psychosocial home health care area. We try to make the adjustment from leaving a hospital to living at home, a little easier for the patient."

Morgantini said a patient desiring House Calls' services must be considered "Home-bound." Home-bound patients are those who suffer from illnesses which impair their ability to get to a physician's office or a hospital when they need to.

House Calls employees about 20 medical personnel who are on-call on a 24-hour-a-day basis. House Calls is open Monday thru Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is available after hours through their answering service.
