Your cial Security

There are several agencies that use the Social Security number for other than Social Security purposes, Thomas Lavelle, Social Security manager in Wilkes-Barre, said

The Internal Revenue Service, for example, requires people to show the Social Security number on income tax returns. Also, the Department of Defense has substituted the Social Security number for the military service number for all members of the armed forces.

Social Security numbers are also required for any person who applies for or receives payment under any Federal or federally-subsidized program. Today, there are comparatively few people who do not need a Social Security number for one purpose or another, Lavelle said.

Among private organizations, there is a growing trend to use the Social Security number in their own numbering systems and control records. Such use is neither authorized nor approved by the Social Security Administration. There is no Federal law that requires a person to furnish a number to these organizations for such purposes.

On the other hand, there is no provision against such use of the Social Security number by an organizaiton for its own records if the number is obtained voluntarily from that person. This is a private matter between the organizatin and

Any organization considering private use of the number should realize that the Social Security Administration does not verify numbers or names or furnish other information from records which would involve an unauthorized expenditure of Social Security taxes or disclosure of confidential infor-

Lottery

With only a little over a week of sales left, more than $1.4 million in high-tier prizes remains to be won by Pennsylvania Double instant game players.

Acting Lottery Executive Director Bernard Edwards noted that in the four high-tier prize categories there were still five unclaimed $100,000 prizes remaining in the game, as well as eight tickets valued at $50,-000 each, 29 prizes of $10,000 and 53 prizes of $5,000.

'Pennsylvania Double tickets can be purchased at over 8,100 Pennsylvania Lottery retail outlets throughout the Commonwealth," Edwards said. "Players can determine if they are winners by gently rubbing the coverings off the six play spots. A special feature of this game allows players who find a keystone and two matching prize amounts to win double the prize indicated.'

The last official day of sale for Pennsylvania Double is Monday, Oct. 7, 1985.

lured many a film-goer to see the "Year of the Dragon." The movie is an explosive crime drama about gangland violence and racial tensions in New York's Chinatown. Mickey Rourke, who turns in a powerful performance, portrays police captain Stanley White whose assignment is to curtail gang violence in the Chinatown section of the city. It is unfortunate for director Michael Cimino that he is better known for his disaster "Heaven's Gate" rather than his success "The Deerhunter," but it is fortunate for movie viewers, however, that there are semblances of "The Deerhunter" rather than "Heaven's Gate" in the "Year of the Dragon."

Written by Cimino and Oliver Stone, the screenplay for the "Year of the Dragon" lacks consistency, but captures the code of honor associated with the elderly Chinese, broken in the film by Joey Tai (actor John Lone). The plot could have been tightened, and it is this cohesive factor missing in the movie that accounts for its length, 136 minutes.

Overall, the "Year of the Dragon" is stereotypical and not only sexist, but racist as well. In fact, a group calling itself the Coalition Against Year of the Dragon, made up of labor unions, media groups, Chinese factions, women and community organizations, proclaimed their dis-Laurentis, the producer, and MGM-UA, the film's distributor, at protests held in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Boston and Chicago.
