Grant is awarded

The Kingston Township Board of Supervisors have been awarded a Rat Source Elimination Grant through funding provided by the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources. Funding has been reserved for the Township under the special state program.

Under the terms of the grant agreement, the Township must secure bids from qualified area contractors for the demolition and removal of the structures.

Structures scheduled for removal under this year's program according to the Board of Supervisors, are located at 53 South Pioneer Avenue, 63 Stafford Street, and 84 North Pioneer Avenue. The buildings requiring removal are structurally unsound. They provide easy access for, and a habitat conducive to rodent survival. The buildings once demolished must be removed to a D.E.R. approved landfill.

This Vector Control Program is an attempt to improve unsightly conditions within the Township and to eliminate hazards which pose a threat to the health, safety, and welfare of township citizens.

Wet bug

Michael Kozloski looks rather calm as he sits on a wall overlooking the creek at Pickett's Charge Restaurant. Kozloski is not waiting for a bus, but rather for a tow truck to pull his Volkswagen out of the creek. While traveling south on Route 415, Kozloski missed the turn on to Center Hill Road and wound up in the creek. There were no injuries during the mishap.

Environmental Week noted

Joanne Nardone, District Manager for the Luzerne County Conservation District has announced that October 13-19 has been declared Environmental Education Week in Pennsylvania.

According to a recent proclamation issued by Governor Dick Thornburg: "All citizens must recognize the importance of protecting our environment in the present and for the future. Environmental Education Week is designed to increase student awareness about the environment and their responsibility to preserve it."

In recognition of the need to maintain our vital resources, the Pennsylvania Department of Education and Environmental Resources are jointly promoting a program of environmental education throughout the state school system.

In support of the Governor's proclamation, Miss Nardone has encouraged local area school districts to develop and implement an effective environmental program that emphasizes the importance of protecting our natural resources for future generations.

To assist in these efforts, publications have been made available by the State Department of Education, Department of Environmental Resources, the Bureau of State Parks, the Pennsylvania Fish and Game Commissions, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

For additional information regarding these publications or planning assistance, you may contact Dr. Dean R. Steinhart, Environmental Education Office, Pennsylvania Department of Education, 717-783-6994 or contact the local Conservation District office in Nanticoke at 735-8700.

With anticipation gone and most of the excitement dissipated, it is time to take a look, in retrospect, at the Television Academy of Arts and Sciences 37th annual Emmy award presentations. This year's telecast, with its usual surprises, was far more entertaining and fast-paced than previous years.

"Hill Street Blues," second among series nominations with 11, was a disappointment to its fans. The series only added one award to the 25 awards it amassed in its first four seasons, that award going to Betty

Thomas as best supporting actress. It was expected that 1985 would bring an end to the dominance of "Hill Street Blues" in the Emmy department; in fact, it was long overdue.

"Miami Vice," the series that many critics believed would become the new champion of Emmys, was honored with four. The first three were technical awards for art direction, cinematography, and film sound editing. They were well-deserved since the show is noted for its "look," high-fashion, and music style. The fourth Emmy went to Edward James Olmos as best supporting actor.

It was the series "Cagney & Lacey" that surprisingly outshot all favorites and garnered the most Emmys, a total of six. It was not so much a surprise that "Cagney & Lacey" dominated the series awards, as it was that the voting members of the Television Academy of Arts and Sciences finally recognized the merit and quality of the show. Emmys went to Karen Arthur, best directing of a drama series, and Patricia Green, best writing of a drama series.

The CBS series also won two technical awards for film editing and film sound mixing. Much to the pleasure of executive producer Barney Rosenzweig, "Cagney & Lacey" was the winner in one of the most prestigious categories, "Outstanding Drama Series."

Tyne Daly, who portrays Mary Beth Lacey, was announced best actress in a drama series for the third consecutive year. It was disappointing that Sharon Gless was not also acclaimed as such. In programs such as "Cagney & Lacey" and even "Kate & Allie," it is difficult to understand how one actress can take precedence over the other when both compliment each other. In such situations, it would be far more equitable if co-awards were feasible.

William Daniels, who plays Dr. Mark Craig on "St. Elsewhere," won his first Emmy in three tries for best actor in a drama series.

Moving on to comedy...There was never a doubt that "The Cosby Show" would win as best comedy series. The show was the biggest hit of the season for NBC in its attempt to make a ratings comeback. The series also won best comedy writing for Ed Weinberg and Michael Leeson and best directing for Jay Sandrich.

Robert Guillaume, in Bill Cosby's absence, was recognized as best actor for his role in "Benson," while Jane Curtin of "Kate & Allie" was acknowledged as best actress in a comedy series. Outstanding supporting actor and actress in a comedy series went to John Larroquette, "Night Court," and Rhea Perlman, "Cheers."

Other recipients of Emmys were "Do You Remember Love?" best dramatic special; "The Jewel in the Crown," (PBS) best limited series; "Motown Returns to the Apollo," outstanding variety, comedy, or music special, and "Garfield in the Rough," outstanding animated program.

All in all, NBC led the Emmys with 25 including 13 technical awards; CBS finished second with 18, PBS with 17 and ABC with 8.

4-H needs more leaders

If you've got skills and experience, share them. That's what Dale Swire does as one of the more than 206 4-H adult volunteer leaders in Luzerne County. These 4-H volunteer leaders conduct a variety of 4-H projects and activities of interest to 4-H members from 8 to 19 years of age. But as volunteers they don't have to be experts in the specialized subject areas where they teach, according to Christine A. Tomascik, Home Economist-Youth. As a volunteer leader Swire receives training and obtains educational material and resources to use in the 4-H program from the Cooperative Extension Service at Penn State University and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.
