Dividend checks being mailed

A total of $33.9 million in inflation dividend checks are being mailed this weekend to reach 420,300 households in early December, Revenue Secretary Jim Scheiner announced.

"Benefits paid out through this and other Pennsylvania Lottery funded programs now exceed $2.2 billion," Scheiner said. "Inflation dividend benefits alone have totaled nearly $264 million. Households find these checks of up to $125 each particularly useful to offset winter expenses, including heating costs."

For the past three years, Pennsylvania has had the nation's largest and most profitable lottery and it is the only lottery to target profits to senior citizen programs.

"This year, the Pennsylvania Lottery made a higher profit than total profits over its first seven years of operations," Scheiner noted. "This enables Pennsylvania to spend more money on benefits per senior citizen than any other state."

Inflation dividends of $30 to $125 are sent automatically to those households which qualify for the property tax-rent rebate program. The household income limit for the program is currently $11,999, but it will increase to $15,000 for claims to be filed in 1986.

Those who qualify are 65 or older, widows and widowers age 50 or older and the disabled age 18 or older. Applicants who have a problem with a claim can call the special toll-free telephone line 1-800-SR-CLAIM (1-800-772-5246).

Inflation dividends were first distributed in 1979. Other programs funded by Pennsylvania Lottery sales are property tax-rent rebates, county aging programs, nursing home aid, free mass transit and shared rides, and reduced driver registration fees. The newest program, PACE, provides $4 co-pay prescriptions for those age 65 or older, with incomes under $15,000 married or $12,000 single.

Jaycees sponsor program

The Centurion Jaycees sponsor many educational programs for inmates at the State Correctional Institution at Dallas. For several years now the organization, through its education committee, has made it possible for interested inmates to study for their college degrees. Two colleges, Luzerne County Community College and College Misericordia, are presently offering courses at the prison. Other programs include training in leadership and public speaking. Courses are held periodically in first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation. But aviation ground school tops the list as the organization's most unusual educational undertaking.

During the six years that the Jaycees have sponsored aviation ground school, more than 200 inmates have participated in the program. Charles VanWinkle, the inmate at Dallas responsible for initiating the aviation program, explained that inmates enroll for a variety of reasons.

"Some of our students have aspirations of obtaining a private pilot's license. Of course, that is the primary goal toward which our program is geared. But others may get involved simply for the knowledge to be gained by going through the program. In addition to covering the principles of flight and the federal aviation regulations, the program includes instruction in navigation and meteorology. These latter two subjects may come in handy even if a graduate of the program later decides not to become a pilot. Weather, for instance, affects all of us."

But VanWinkle, himself a certified flight instructor who teaches many of the classes, stresses that the program is geared toward preparing graduates to become pilots.

"At the end of the program, students are given the standard federal examination. This is the same examination student pilots must take on the street. It's comprehensive of everything we cover in the classroom. Those who pass the examination, which is extremely difficult, can take genuine pride in their accomplishment."

The program has received widespread support from the prison administration.
