All too often we hear of tragedies that occur around holidays. And, even though these tragedies occur all year long, they seem doubly tragic they during happen the Christmas season. This is supposed to be a time of joy - a time when people share time with family and friends and a time when all of us are supposed to be merry.

Keep the holidays merry for you and for those who love you - don't drink and drive.

THERE SEEMS to be so much emphasis placed on drinking and driving anymore - even more this year than ever before.

I stopped in a local liquor store the other day to buy my annual bottle of holiday cheer. (And, yes, I did only buy one bottle.)

There were two young girls from one of the area high schools standing outside the liquor store - in rather nippy weather, I might add. Neither one of these girls spoke a word to me upon my entering the store. However, when I exited with a bottle in my possession, they immediately jumped on me and offered me a stackful of literature about the ongoing drinking and driving campaign.

I took the literature home and read through every bit of it - partly because I have known a few innocent people in my life who have lost their lives because of a drunk driver and partly because I respected these young girls for standing out in the cold weather to do their part for the drinking and driving campaign.

THE LITERATURE they gave me did hit home. It made me more aware of just how many people drink and drive and how we can all avoid the tragedies that seem to strike at this time of year.

For those of you who may be interested in obtaining information on drinking and driving (either for yourself or for a loved one you think may have a problem), here are two addresses from where this information may be obtained:

I RAN INTO an old friend at a local coffee shop the other evening well, she's not really an old friend, but rather a young person who's been a friend of mind for a long time. (And, for you wise guys out there - no I did not injury her when I ran into her, either.)

Patty and I go way back - all the way back to West Wyoming, as a matter of fact. As we were growing up, our backyards met and our families were always good friends.

I was thrilled to see that Patty had kept up her swimming talents and was still racking up medals in the pool. She and her three sisters were always bringing home trophies while swimming their way to the finish line at the Pittston YMCA when we were kids.

I always figured out that's why their father had to build that big house in West Wyoming - just to make room for all those trophies.

Anyway, Patty, a great big Merry Christmas to you and Gino and the kids - and to your Mom and Dad, too. Hope your holidays are happy. (And you thought I would spare you from this column, didn't you? Fooled you!)

Remember the true meaning of Christmas - the sharing, the rejoicing, and the caring. Take a moment to reflect on the real reason we celebrate Christmas and thank God for the opportunity to share this season with those you love and those who love you.

I hope all of you enjoy the happiest, healthiest Christmas season ever and may peace and goodwill come to each and every one of you. Merry Christmas!

Thank you to Chuck for bringing the ground pine, to Julie for finding the coat hanger and shaping it into a circle, and to Will for finding a nail and putting it up. Julie and I wound the ground pine around the hanger to make the wreath and I must say even if it is a little lopsided, it is lovely.

Could not find a proper bow so used a small colored one temporarily, then I brought a bright red larger bow down later and added it to the wreath and as Johnsaid, now it is beautiful. Thanks, John, for that sandwich, which made the whole project worthwhile. A handmade project which makes Christmas what it is.

The library auction Christmas dance held at the Woodlands was a great success. It turned into a gala event with a delicious dinner followed by dancing and a mini-auction featuring Christmas items. Hopefully, the dinner-dance will become an annual event.

I took Mrs. Crump to Yesterdays for dinner to celebrate her 91st birthday and we had a great evening. A good friend and neighbor of hers had a birthday cake complete with sparkler sent to the table, which we shared with him and other friends who also had a birthday person with them. That birthday person received a bottle of champagne with a sparkler and we got to share that with them. A major step was taken recently with the completion of a tri-leadership program event in which Leadership Wilkes-Barre, Leadership Lackawanna, and Leadership Hazleton joined hands to promote economic development.

The leadership programs have become one of the most exciting ventures toward a sound quality of life in the history of Northeastern Pennsylvania. These programs have enabled young talent in the region to study and train and become educated with respect to issues affecting their respective jurisdictions. Twenty to 25 persons are graduated in each leadership class, and, in fact, the leadership programs in Northeastern Pennsylvania have pioneered similar activities elsewhere in the state.

With Leadership Wilkes-Barre having been initiated five years ago, Leadership Lackawanna-four years ago, and Leadership Hazleton starting this year, Northeastern Pennsylvania is ablaze with the development of leadership talent to take on. new responsibilities in coming years however, was the agreement of the three leadership programs to jointly sponsor a program topic on economic development. Held in one of the newest projects in the region's history, the Montage Ski Area, the program featured not only a panel of experts on the various economic development activities within greater Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, and Hazleton, but was highlighted by a luncheon address by the Pennsylvania Secretary of Commerce, James Pickard.

What truly became a major event,

In the opening kickoff session, two leading bank executives, Dave Tressler, representing Northeastern Bank, and Rick Ross, representing First Eastern Bank, outlined their perception of regional economic development with Tressler highlighting the importance of cooperative economic development programs and Ross spotlighting the recent efforts in Northeastern Pennsylvania to join together and bid for the General Motors Saturn Automotive Facility Plant.

Following the presentations and the luncheon, a two-hour play acting event was held featuring a would-be developer who proposed a project, and the leadership classes were divided into breakout units to respond accordingly to the proposal. The day's activities were closed by a presentation featuring the theme of regional economic development by Joe Krum of the Pennsylvania Power and Light Company.

As part of the activities during the day's events, the Economic Development Council of Northeastern Pennsylvania participated along with the Committee for Economic Growth (CEG) in Greater Wilkes-Barre, the Greater Scranton Chamber of Commerce, CANDO of Greater Hazleton, and the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau.

Thus was born an innovative tripartite process which hopefully will be continued in subsequent years and, indeed expanded to include other topics. The Economic Development topic would have been featured in each of the leadership programs individually so the jointly sponsored program was credited to each of the leadership programs.

During the nine-month period of time in which nine different functions or issues are highlighted and each of the leadership classes are trained in local and or regional issues, research projects are carried out by some of the leadership classes. These research projects examine a particular issue or develop a particular approach in developing a projecg of benefit to the quality of life in the service area

Most recently, the leadership program in Wilkes-barre achieved a major milestone in leadership programs nationally. A number of the higher educational institutions serving greater Wilkes-Barre have agreed to accept the leadership program as a credit course, thus, future leadership students will have the opportunity to not only participate in an excellent program, but receive college credits if they wish to pay the appropriate tuition for Getting the benefits of the leadership process to other parts of Northeastern Pennsylvania would be an appropriate next step so as to encourage leadership programs in the Pocono Mountains and in Schuylkill County. By establishing a network of leadership programs, the entire region will benefit and a new generation of leaders will appropriately take their place and help create an atmosphere of excellence to mold Northeastern Pennsylvania to effectively compete for economic growth in the remainder of the 1980's and 1990's.
