If a more mellow, California style jazz is to your liking, come hear the group Northwind which will bring its intriguing blend of soft jazz and blues to the Penn State Wilkes-Barre Community Center at 8 p.m. on April 22. The Golden Globe Awards have been presented annually since 1943. They are voted by members of the Hollywood Foreign Press Assn. representing 100 million readers in 50 countries.

This year's ceremony was held in the International Ballroom of the Beverly Hilton Hotel, and was aired over 70 stations in the United States and in 22 foreign countries. Locally, television viewers who are not cable subscribers, were able to see the awards on Channel 38, WOLF-TV, the newest and only independent station in the area.

The presentation produced, directed, and written by Gene Weed and Ken Shapiro for the Dick Clark Co. Inc., was a simple, entertaining, and well-paced production free of lavish production numbers and monotonous acceptance speeches.

Charlton Heston and Donna Mills hosted the 43rd annual event and introduced such presenters as Diahann Carroll, Richard Chamberlain, William Devane, Patty Duke, Faye Dunaway, Shelley Long, Howie Mandell, Jennifer O'Neill, Robert Stack and Peter Strauss.

Gladys Knight, Janie Fricke, and Lou Rawls entertained the audience by singing the best original song nominees: "A View to Kill," "The Power of Love," "Rhythm of the Night," "We Don't Need Another Hero," and the award-winning "Say You Say Me" from "White Nights," Lionel Richie.

Kirk Douglas presented Barbara Stanwyck with the Cecil B. DeMille Award for her outstanding contributions to the entertainment industry. Miss Stanwyck was given a standing ovation as was Bette Davis who announced the best motion picture as "Out of Africa." Sylvia Sidney, award winner for her performance in "An Early Frost," and Whoopi Goldberg, recipient of the Golden Globe for best performance in "The Color Purple" also merited standing ovations.

Jon Voight was a surprise, being named best actor for his role in "Runaway Train," as was "Murder, She Wrote" announced as best television series-drama. It's a wonder how the tongue-in-cheek "Murder, She Wrote" qualifies in the same category with such shows as "St. Elsewhere" and "Cagney & Lacey."
