"UNFINISHED BUSINESS: Teen Suicide, Everyone's Concern" and "What's A Parent To Do?" two video documentaries produced locally by MLA Productions, Inc., in association with King's College will premiere locally at 10 p.m. and 10:30 p.m., respectively, Thursday, Feb. 20, on WVIA-TV Channel 44.

Produced and directed by Dr. Anthony Mussari, professor and chairperson of the mass communications department at King's, "Unfinished Business: Teen Suicide, Everyone's Concern" was funded by Mercy Hospital, Wilkes-Barre; the Pennsylvania State Education Association, Harrisburg; the Alliance for Creative Development, Quakertown and Lansdale; the Quakertown Community Hospital; and, The Fairmount Institute, Philadelphia.

"Unfinished Business: Teen Suicide, Everyone's Concern" revolves around a one-week workshop, "Suicide: Ethical, Educational and Societal Issues," held at Lehigh University in June, 1985. The cultural, intellectual, social and philosophical trends influencing suicide victims, the ways that parents, teachers and community leaders are responding to the increasing number of teenage suicides and the problems encountered by people trying to change public policies concerning suicide are discussed.

"What's a Parent To Do?" was filmed on location in Quakertown, Emmaus, Wilkes-Barre, Shamokin and New York City. The documentary focuses on the suicide issue from the viewpoint of parents and what they can do to help teenagers who may be contemplating suicide. Several parents of teenage suicide victims and a teenager who attempted suicide are featured. A suicide prevention program in Quakertown is also examined.
