Dr. Willames presents paper

Dr. Lee Willames, associate professor at College Misericordia, will present a paper at the "International Conference on the First Year Experience," to be held July 6-11 in Great Britain.

The Conference is sponsored by the British Society for Research Into Higher Education and the Center for the Study of the Freshman Year at the University of South Carolina. Hundreds of scholars from 22 nations around the world will attend the five-day Conference.

Dr. Willames' paper is entitled, "A Program Approach to Meeting the Needs of Students from Across the Academic Spectrum." The paper addresses what Professor Willames class the crisis of the eighties in higher education, student attrition.

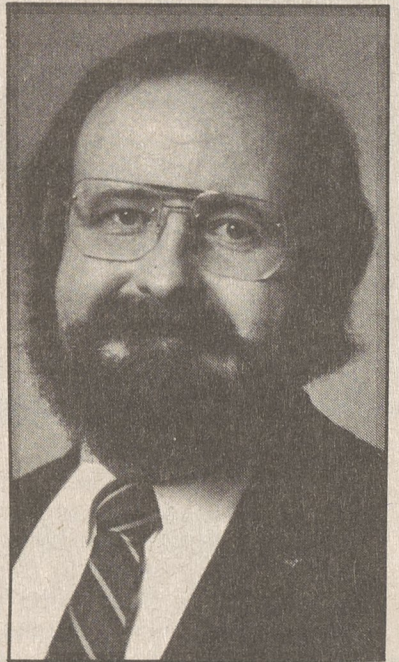

On the basis of his research and experience, he will speak on the need to create programs to serve the needs of students of various ability levels in the freshman year. He will discuss how these programs fit into a comprehensive plan to reduce student attrition in the first year of college.

Dr. Willames is a professor of Russian history and the director of the Honors Program, the Liberal Studies Program, and the General Studies Program at College Misericordia. He is an award-winning teacher with 20 years experience and a national reputation for program design.

In recognition of his organizational abilities, Dr. Willames was one of 30 Fellows selected in a national competition by the American Council on Education. The Fellows program identifies and prepares outstanding faculty members for responsible positions in college and university administration.

Dr. Willames resides in Trucksville with his wife, Frances, and children, Elizabeth, Lee, and David.
