Auction committee exceeds antiques goal

There are more than 600 antiques, one item more beautiful than the other, neatly assembled and tagged in the antique storage room, awaiting purchase by antique lovers, during this year's Back Mountain Memorial Library Auction.

Chairman Ernest Ashbridge, his co-chairman Elizabeth Covert and members of the committee have surpassed their expectations in obtaining this year's many lovely pieces.

Ashbridge, who has been involved with the antiques in the auction for approximately 25 years, has been chairman for the past five years. His wife, Betty, has been involved for about the same length of time and was chairman of the antiques committee for two years.

The Ashbridges live in Shavertown and Ernie is vice president and controller of Hanover National Bank. He is a past president of the Dallas School District and is presently serving his fourth term as a board member. Ashbridge is also a member of the West Side Tech

Board and the Luzerne Intermediate Unit 18. Elizabeth Covert, co-chairman, is a native of Dallas. She is the former Elizabeth Parrish, whose grandfather owned what was known at one time as Parrish Heights. It was where her grandfather, Elmer Parrish's farm was located. The farmhouse was on the site where Fitch's home now stands and all of the land on the top of Huntsville Road was the Parrish farmland including barns and gardens.

Elizabeth worked with the auction when it was held in front of the Risley barn and was in charge of the soda stand. This is the first time she has served as co-chairman of any committee, although she has worked for the past four years.

She has a daughter Sharon and four granddaughters. Sharon and her husband, Dallas Township Police Chief Carl Miers, donated a grandfather clock to the auction last year. This year, they are giving a Winthrop desk.

"We started searching for antiques in January and have been fortunate in securing more beautiful pieces than ever," said Ashbridge. "The committee members have done an excellent job this year and the dealers have been very generous. We are looking forward to raising a sizeable amount of money for the library."
