Entertainment

There is no questioning the fact that the field of entertainment covers many diverse areas. Even though multi-faceted, the chief source of entertainment for most people is television. If one looks hard enough, there are numerous organizations, even in TV broadcasting, that render great assistance to the general public and furnish valuable information to satisfy one's curiosity or interest. One such organization is the Television Information Office.

TIO was established in October, 1959, to provide a bridge of understanding between the public and the television industry. Because television is such a major social force, it is important that its role be understood. TIO provides a continuing information service to meet the needs of the public, educators, students, the press, the clergy, government agencies, librarians, communications professionals, as well as broadcasters.

When the debate on TV's impact on children began, TIO published For the Young Viewer, a study of worthwhile children's programming by stations throughout the United States. The book won a special George Foster Peabody Award. It also commissioned TV as Art, a compilation of ten essays also produced by the National Council of Teachers of English to illustrate how techniques for studying older literary forms can be applied to television. Among the research projects TIO has commissioned and the more than 40 TIO publication currently available to the general public are:

- A 22-year series of national surveys directed by the Roper Organization to measure changing public attitudes toward television and other mass media.
- Several studies on the public's attitude toward violence on television, ecological and energy matters, and the reliability of the media.

- TV Mini-File, a pocket summary of vital statistics and public opinions on television as a social force.

- Reprints of significant speeches and articles dealing with television.

The Dallas Post's Football '86

featuring:
Dallas
Bishop O'Reilly

Lake-Lehman
Wyoming Seminary

West Side Tech

The Dallas Post is endeavoring on its third special section, to be published August 27, entitled "Football '86".

The publication will be devoted mainly to the high school teams from the area, but will also be full of informative reading the local football fan won't want to miss as the 1986 season gets underway.

Items on local athletes playing for colleges around the country, predictions on conference races, and lots of photos of players, coaches, cheerleaders, and twirlers are all expected to be a part of "Football '86".

What better way can you think of to reach the sports-minded customer than by reserving your advertising space today in this special edition of our salute to the gridiron?

And, is there a better way to let our local high school players know their community is behind them than by advertising in this publication?

A wide variety of advertising plans is available, including our outstanding color work.
