business."

The cost of the 106 programs nationwide is $650 million annually, but compared to the cost of incarceration, the investment per student in a Job Corps program is much cheaper.

"It would cost four or five times as much money to house an individual in a jail that it would to put a person through a Job Corps program," Kanjorski stated. "Maybe you won't be able to see the effects right now, but by the turn of the century approximately 1 1/2 million people will be trained and be productive citizens because of the Job Corps."

The operation, which is administered by the Department of Labor, helps youths 16-21 years of age who are out of school, unemployed or lacking job skills, with the entire program taking six months to two years to complete, depending on the progress of the individual.

"What we are dealing with is the leftovers," Lerner said. "These people are not criminals and they are not bad individuals. But when they come here a lot of them are borderline. Ninety-nine per cent of these kids have been told they are stupid or bad at some point in their lives for various reasons, and after a while they start to believe it. And that doubt prevents them from learning."

"We have an intense two-week orientation period and the first thing we do is to get them to shift their attitude to what works for them and what doesn't. We don't tell them what is right and what is wrong. But, for example, if a person steals they know they can go to jail. So, if they want personal possessions, a house, a car, a family, they know stealing is not the way to go about attaining those goals."

Aside from the educational and vocational training the Corps provides, participants (210 men and 108 women) are also instructed socially.

"We have to prepare these people so they can adjust to life in the real world," Lerner explained. "A lot of these kids don't know what a check-book is, or how to wash their clothes, or how to pay bills. We have to teach them."

"They are responsible for the maintenance of their dormitories and they are inspected every day. And they are proud of what they are doing. They want to show you what they have done."

Lerner says, from a staff point of view, working at the center is rough, but that the effort is worth it.

"When a kid drops out of here, and it does happen, you feel very disgusted with yourself. You wonder if there is anything more you could have done to prevent it. But when you hear from people that have graduated and have made it in the world, it gives you a good feeling. That's when you know the program is worthwhile."

Workers

work the Corps workers have done.

"We wouldn't have this (horse barn) completed without their help," Hillman noted. "And they are very dedicated. Some of these kids come to work here on their days off. That tells you something about their character."

Tony Bruno, carpentry instructor, who has been with the Corps for nine years, oversees the work and has high praise for his crew members.

"These kids get up at 6 a.m., eat breakfast, get on the bus and are here by 7:30," the 60-year old Old Forge resident said. "They usually put in about six hours a day and they work very hard."

Bruno says some of the people he gets are not even familiar with a screwdriver or a pair of pliers, but through practice at the center and the on-the-job training, many turn out to be competent workers and go on to successful careers in their area of skill in the outside world.

Sarah Showl, 21, of Mountainburg, Arkansas, says she joined the Job Corps after moving in with her grandmother in New Albany and has learned a great deal from the program. "I didn't have a job back home so when I came here I joined the Corps. At the end of September or early October, I'm going to be placed in a job in Florida."

Bruno says corps workers have to be 18 years of age before they can be placed in a job and have to be associated with the program 12 to 14 months before they become certified. He says the Corps is not currently working on any other projects, but may have another coming up in Pittston.

The Center has already done work at Sullivan County High School, groundskeeping at the Benton Rodeo and benches for a park in Dushore.

Hillman says he would like to continue using Job Corps workers for years to come, but that it would depend on whether the center would like to continue providing their services.

"We are expanding more and more every year," Hillman explained. "We need the help. Last year we had about 70,000 people. This year we are expecting 120,000 to 140,000."

The Red Rock facility is operated by Management and Training Corporation (MTC) of Ogden, Utah, which also operates 13 other centers and is currently the No. 1 contractor in the country.

More People Reap Benefits From H&R Block Tax Course

Thousands of successful tax preparers started their careers with the H&R Block Income Tax Course.

H&R Block has been teaching income taxes for 30 years and this year is offering a basic income tax course starting September 3rd and 4th with morning and evening classes available.

Many of the most successful people in the tax preparation business started with this basic course which teaches various phases of income tax preparation. The 13 week course progresses from simple to complex tax problems. Students learn through classroom discussion and homework.

The course is ideal for those interested in tax preparation as a career or for those who want to learn about taxes for their own personal use. The course is challenging and, for those who are highly motivated, can prove to be profitable as well. No prerequisites are required for enrollment.

Qualified course graduates may be offered job interviews for positions with Block. Many of Block's employees find the flexible hours a plus. However, Block is under no obligation to offer employment, nor are graduates under any obligation to accept employment with H&R Block.

One low course fee includes all textbooks, supplies and tax forms necessary for completion of the course. Certificates and 7.5 continuing education units will be awarded upon successful completion of the course.

Registration forms and a brochure for the income tax course may be obtained by contacting the H&R Block office at 211 Wyoming Ave., Kingston, 288-9367. Courses are being offered in five area locations.
