Tour's end

Members of the Luzerne County Conservation Districts 7th Annual Tour lost little time in purchasing freshly baked sweet corn when they stopped at Dymond's Farm Market & Bakery Saturday. Some of the members found the fresh baked goods too tempting to pass up.

Farms

everything for her catering service from "scratch."

The catering and the Weaver Market in Centerville are a family affair and Betty, her husband, David; mother, Esthella Whispell; daughters, Jan and Lois; son, David, and daughter-in-law, Elaine, help in the business. Elaine also bakes unique wedding cakes. While in Centerville, Dr. Gerald M. Reisinger, naturopath and nutritionist, spoke on nutrition and holistic living.

After lunch and following Dr. Reisinger's talk, the group toured the honey farm of William H. Perry of Orange. This beekeeper has 1300 colonies of bees and migrates between Florida and Pennsylvania each year. He has a home and a honey house in both states and he hires refrigerated semi-trailers to move his bees in single story hives to and from Florida and hauls the supers and other equipment in his own trucks.

The last stop before a shopping excursion was at the Christmas Tree Farm of Ernest Gay, located at Sutton Creek Road, Orange. The land was originally purchased by Milo Gay in 1885 and during the past 100 years has been apple orchards, chicken farm, dairy farm, saw mill and even a post office. Ernie's father, Arthur Gay, was very active in the formation of NEPA, now Sire Power.

Since the early 1960's Gays have been raising Christmas trees on 75 acres of the land with nearly 25 acres in varying degrees of production. They specialize in the Blue Spruce and some Douglass Fir. People may cut their own trees as a part of their holiday spirit.

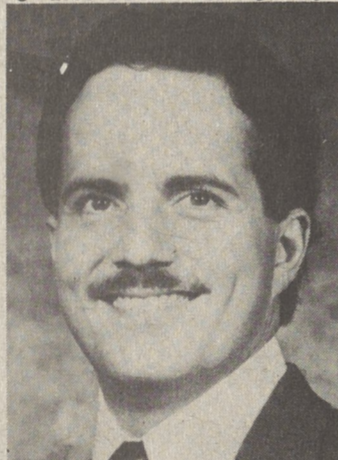

Final stop was Dymond's Farm Market where members of the tour crowded in the market, purchasing freshly baked bread, rolls, cakes, cookies, pies and other tempting sweets. They also purchased the fresh corn, cauliflower, apples, winter squash, tomatoes and other produce fresh from the Dymond

Farm.

Many members of the group appeared to have forgotten calories and were treating themselves to Dymond's delicious ice-cream.

With the clock reaching 4 p.m., the participants returned to the buses and cars to return to their starting place in Nanticoke, making plans for next year's tour.
