Holtzman and Kanjorski both view more jobs

By JOHN HOINSKI
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. candidates Paul Kanjorski and Marc Holtzman have been saying right along that their No. 1 concern for the people in the 11th Congressional District is providing more jobs.

That doesn't necessarily mean that Back Mountain residents will specifically benefit from their efforts, but they will certainly be included in the overall plan.

"My main concern for this area is jobs and economic growth," Holtzman said. "We need to sustain growth by providing special tax incentives and other policies to attract businesses to the area. On a federal level, I am for a balanced budget and a decrease in taxes, so the effects on the people of this district, as a result, are pretty much universal in appeal."

Kanjorski's assessment of what his platform will mean to the residents here are similar to that of his challengers.

"Overall, the people in the Back Mountain represent about one-seventh of the constituents that this district covers," Kanjorski stated. "But they are a part of the total picture and whatever we do for the district benefits them as well."

Specifically, Kanjorski said approximately one month ago he began helping to put together an Urban Development Action Grant for the expansion of the Offset Paperback Company. The project will cost millions of dollars and will allow the company to set up additional printing that will mean about 40 more jobs.

He also talked about the expansion of the Luzerne County Fair and the use of Job Corps workers he helped bring in to help with last year's projects.

"We want to continue enlarging the fair grounds until it reaches its desired goal," Kanjorski noted. "It is one of the finest operations in Northeastern Pennsylvania and we will do whatever we can to help it grow."

"But those two instances are target areas," he added. "Aside from that we also deal with day-to-day reports that we get from people in the district."

Back Mountain wins with either

By JOHN HOINSKI
Staff Writer

Incumbent 20th District State Senator Charles D. Lemmond Jr., R-Dallas, says residents in the Back Mountain can expect a number of changes, especially those concerning the Cross Valley Expressway and Route 309.

Democratic challenger Joseph Bilbow says his plans for Back Mountain people are based on a threefold platform that will also be the basis of his campaign.

Therefore, no matter who emerges victorious in the November 4 general election, the Back Mountain will be included in plans for improvement.

"Specifically, the entrance to the Back Mountain (the rock cut section in Kingston Township) is all set for paving," Lemmond said. "But we also want to get adequate lighting and directional markers, too. That section is one of the darkest and worst lit in Northeast Pennsylvania."

"Kingston Township has been great preparing accident report information to PennDOT and we are on top of that situation. The completion of the Cross Valley Expressway up to Interstate 81 and the Veterans Hospital is also going to come. That project is at the top of the list for Northeast Pennsylvania."

Another problem area Lemmond will be looking to correct again involves highway safety, this one concerning the intersection of Main Street and Route 309 near Offset Paperback. The site has been the scene of a number of accidents and is considered very dangerous.

"We have got to make that intersection safe," Lemmond noted. "There are businesses there where a lot of people come through that intersection. This is an area that businesses, police and the general public have a great deal of concern in. I have met with Ian Richardson (executive president of Offset Paperback) along with police and PennDOT officials and we are working to have that situation corrected."

Lemmond also says he will be working to improve the boating and fishing areas at Harveys Lake and the Campground project at Francis Slocum State Park in addition to educational and recycling ideas.

Bilbow, the 39-year old challenger, says his plan for improvement will be threefold.

"My three main items on the agenda will be based on economic development, environmental improvement and educational improvement," Bilbow explained.

"First, we have to get the Cross Valley Expressway completed. I think access is 75 per cent of the issue. People can't get to work. You have to approach it on a personal level on how the road affects you. Plus, if the roads are made safe and accessible to the major interstates then maybe industry
