tion, asked council to extend the ban until the Dallas Water Company could provide an adequate supply of service to the development over a period of time. After a lengthy verbal exchange, Gilroy and council agreed if the Natona and Culver tanks are filled to capacity Tuesday, June 28, the ban on rationing will be lifted. If the water in the tank drops to 50 percent or lower June 28, or anytime after that date, the rationing will be reinstated. This proposal was made by Dallas Water Company manager Joseph Salla.

Salla also explained that as soon as the new pump was on line later this week there would be plenty of water and that after Tuesday, there would be enough water to provide service through the tanks.

The boil water advisory will be in effect for Stonehedge, Elmcrest and High Point Acres until this week, at least.

John Molski, vice president of the Stonehedge Association told council that he had talked with the owner of the company that day, Tuesday, June 21, who told Molski that it took two to two and a half days to drain the tank but at least seven days to fill the tank to get it to Stonehedge.

Mrs. Joan Hiller of Dallas presented a petition by 339 of the 349 residents approached, protesting the rezoning of 33.5 acres of land from C-1 to R-1 in order that developer Ed Nelen could build 51 homes on the land which is near Powderhorn Estates and will be named Deer Meadows.

Mrs. Hiller maintained that the petition pertained to all conservation land in the borough and not only to that specific parcel. Borough solicitor John Fine told Hiller that since the petition included Deer Meadows in the resolution, it could not be entered in the public record as testimony since the Deer Meadow proposal was taken at a public hearing weeks before and the transcript arrived at council offices June 21. Council did accept the petition but not as a matter of public record.

Diane Domzalski of Hickory Road, Dallas, asked council members if the decision on Deer Meadows zoning had been made and she was told no, and also that if the decision was not in accord with the people it could be appealed.

Council accepted the resignation of Dr. Craig Aicher from the Civil Service Commission and approved the appointment of William Shaffer to replace Dr. Aicher to a term ending July, 1990.

Chairman of the recreation committee Russell Eyt reported that the Borough's Burndale Recreation Park opened Monday, June 20, with Jack Wolensky as park director. Eyt said there were very few repairs necessary to restore the center for use and the largest purchase necessary was a new mower.

Request to rezone land draws hot opposition

BY CHARLOT M. DENMON
Staff Writer

A public hearing was held before Dallas Borough Council, Wednesday, June 23, on the request by Flack, Wallack and Moreck Inc., developers who plan to build homes on an 11-acre parcel of land on West Center Hill Road, known as the Bird Sanctuary.

The developers request council to rezone the 11-acres from conservation to residential since in a conservation area, developers are restricted to building one home on every two acres of land.

Lynn Wallack, one of the developers, said the land which includes springs, a stream, woods and wetlands, could be divided into five parcels. He was not specific when asked, however, what type of homes would be built on the five parcels of land. In his presentation Wallack mentioned both townhouses and single dwellings.

"We are not here to argue but to state our plans," Wallack said. "We don't want to go against public opposition."

Wallack said he and his associates are aware of what happens if the zoning is changed from conservation to residential. "We are talking about property in an area of very valuable houses and we want to build comparable ones."

Neither Wallack nor Moreck were specific about the price range or type of houses they would build if the zoning were changed.

Atty. John Morris, representing clients who live near the bird sanctuary and adjacent land, told council that a 1973 ordinance of Dallas Borough prevented rezoning conservation land unless there was a compelling reason.

Morris said he heard no testimony that showed a compelling reason to rezone the 11-acre parcel. "A zoning change is a radical change. A schematic plan cannot be considered a specific reason," Morris said.

Marie Brokenshire of West Center Hill Road asked how Wallack got this property. "There's a need for bird sanctuaries but not for more homes," she said.

Borough solicitor John Fine told Brokenshire her remarks were not related.
