60 athletes from Back Mountain compete in the Keystone Games

By CHARLOT M. DENMON Staff Writer

The rains came but they didn't prevent the 4700 athletes from participating in the opening ceremonies of the Keystone Games last Friday night.

The athletes, dressed in white shorts, white Keystone Games shirts, white socks and shoes, made an impressive sight as they marched in the opening parade that kicked off the official opening of the four-day competition.

As they marched to their designated places on the field, the athletes formed a replica of the Keystone State logo, then stayed in place as the runners carrying the Olympic-style torch entered the field and advanced to the in-place torch to be lighted for the Games.

white-garbed athletes bordered by the volunteers and coaches in the colored shirts designating their respective regions stood and solemnly recited the pledge of the games.

Participants and spectators listened attentively to Owen Costello, director of the games, and to Wilkes-Barre Mayor Leo Namey as they addressed their audience. A roar of excitement filled the air as Franco Harris moved to the podium to speak, then there was complete silence as Harris urged the athletes to give their best, go out to win but win or lose, do it graciously.

The release of multitudes of balloons and a display of fireworks closed the ceremony and the crowd dispersed, the athletes to attend parties in their honor and the officials to add the finishing touches for the competition.
