The roadcut under construction would have meant the real estate company customers coming into the Back Mountain would have to turn around at some point in order to get into the business, a problem which will be facing many businesses once the barrier is completed. Smith also said that the construction work is a minor factor in the decision to relocate, with the main reason being the rapid expansion of the company and the need for bigger offices.

Garry McCoog, the owner of Back Mountain Music Company, which is located near Ruth K. Smith Company, does not think the concrete barriers will help prevent accidents.

"Who is fooling who, there will be just as many accidents whether the barrier is there or not. I don't think most businesses were for it," said McCoog.

McCoog said his business was growing at a rate of 70% last year and this year is only growing at a 30% rate. He thinks there is a definite correlation with the construction work which has made it more difficult to get into his business. He said that people often complain about having a hard time getting into his store, and that the drivers will be intimidated by the barriers making the possibility of accidents more likely to occur.

Siani cleaners is going up for sale, and the main reason is the effect that the two year construction job has had on business. Owner Tom Daniels says his business has dropped 50% since the construction started, and he says he is tired of arguing with PennDOT about the restricted access to his business caused by barricades and a limited driveway width.

"What I lose here, I can't make up elsewhere," said Daniels.

"A few more days and I would have been on the road waiting for a cheese hand-out," said the man.

While many businesses will still have to face the problem of concrete barriers and road barricades limiting access to their business, drivers should find relief soon. According to a spokesperson for PennDOT, repaving will start at the upper end of Route 309 September 27. Traffic will be directed into one lane during the day again while paving is underway, and the barricades will be removed and all lanes open to traffic at night.

A spokeswoman for PennDOT says the Dallas Memorial Highway will be repaved and completed by the third week of October.

Police report

DALLAS TOWNSHIP

Jay Bailey of Tunkhannock was struck by a truck driven by Robert Kasmark of Dallas while Bailey was walking with a friend on Ransom Road, RD, Dallas.

Bailey was walking south with a friend while two vehicles also heading south were approaching behind the boy. The first vehicle, driven by a woman, was traveling approximately 30 to 35 miles per hour while the truck behind her driven by Kasmark pulled out into the other lane to pass her. Kasmark allegedly struck Bailey and drug him about 20 feet.

Kasmark stopped his vehicle but the car in front of him kept moving. The boy flew from the truck about five feet where he fell to the ground.

A witness called the ambulance while Kasmark comforted the victim. When the ambulance and Dallas Township police arrived Bailey was taken in the ambulance to Nesbitt Memorial Hospital.

Kasmark said that while heading south on Ransom Road, he was passing a stopped vehicle when two pedestrians, one Bailey, walking south stepped out in the roadway. Before he could stop he struck the boy on the outside and continued five feet before coming to a full stop.

Officer Michael Valeta reported there were approximately 27 feet of skidmarks remaining on the roadway.

KINGSTON TOWNSHIP

Two vehicles had to be towed from the scene of an accident that occurred Monday, September 19, at the intersection of Route 309 and Church Road, Trucksville.

Richard Miller, Jr., Shavertown, was traveling south in his 1986 Ford on Route 309 when a 1983 Ford driven by Ruth M. Roberts was traveling east on Church Road approaching the intersection of Church Road and Route 309.

Miller stated that he did not realize the light had turned red for Carverton Road at the intersection and he traveled through the red light striking the vehicle driven by Roberts in the left rear quarter area with the front end of his vehicle.

Roberts said that the light had turned green for Church and Carverton Road and she proceeded through the intersection where she was struck by the Miller vehicle.

Both vehicles were towed from the scene by Schmid's tow truck.

Patrolman Joseph W. Bren was the investigating officer.

Disorderly conduct charged

Debra Ann Fuller of Dallas was charged with disorderly conduct and driving under the influence, September 20, at 12:30 a.m., by Patrolman Michael Moravec.

Police were called to Highland Avenue, Trucksville, where Fuller was charged with unreasonable loud noise, obscene language and in hazardous and physically offensive condition. She was also charged with driving under the influence.

Driving under the influence

Patrolmen Walter Davis and Joseph W. Bren were called to the intersection of Dug and Bunker Hill Roads, Trucksville, September 18, where it was reported a minor accident had occurred.

When the officers arrived at the scene, they discovered a red Chevrolet Vega sitting on top of a wood pile on the Joseph Banks property. Driver of the vehicle proved to be Greg J. Mantione of West Pittston.

When questioned Mantione stated that he missed the turn in the road and stopped to back up and didn't watch where he was going. Mantione said he backed onto the woodpile. He had a passenger, Pat Coyne, in his vehicle whose address is unknown.

Mantione was stopped by the officers September 17 at 11:40 p.m. and charged with driving under the influence September 18 at 12:10 a.m.
