Commonwealth donates equipment to Penn State

Commonwealth Telephone Company recently donated four modems, worth more than $12,000, to the Penn State Wilkes-Barre Center for Technology. The modems will be used in the center when it opens for classes in the fall of 1989.

Previously used by Commonwealth for customer applications, the modems convert data for transmission over the telephone network to a computer system. The modems are manufactured by Western Electric and can handle 2400 and 4800 bits per second, depending on the particular model.

Harold Groff, Chairman of the Telecommunications Program at Penn State said, "As part of the new equipment in the Technology Center, the modems will be used in the telecommunications lab for training purposes."

Headquartered in Dallas, Commonwealth Telephone Company serves more than 168,000 customers in 20 counties throughout Eastern Pennsylvania.

PG&W employees help in Crime Watch

Pennsylvania Gas and Water Company (PG&W) employees will serve as extra eyes and ears for reporting community emergencies as part of a new program unveiled during a PG&W news conference in Wilkes-Barre recently. Under the PG&W Utility Crime Watch Program, two-way radios in the Company's 350 radio-equipped vehicles will be used to report possible emergencies to local authorities.

PG&W employees have been trained in identifying a potential emergency and how to report it accurately. Situations ranging from crimes and fires to accidents and suspicious persons will be reported to authorities in the Company's nine-county natural gas and four-county water service area.

"When one of our people becomes aware of an emergency, he or she will call our dispatch center which, in turn, will notify the appropriate agency through a special hookup," said PG&W Security Director Tony Ursi, explaining the workings of the Crime Watch Program.

WATCHING OUT - Employees of PG&W have been trained to spot trouble as they go through their workday. Special license plates adorn trucks staffed by trained employees.

KINGSTON TOWNSHIP

3 car accident on 309

Sgt. J.J. Balavage on Feb. 7 investigated a three-car accident which occurred on Route 309 near N-Mart.

John Konsavage of Harveys Lake said he was traveling south on Route 309 near Newell's Fuel when vehicles driven by Christopher Mullen of Sweet Valley, traveling north in the right lane and a vehicle driven by Victoria Bettie of Delaware, traveling north in the passing lane came toward him just as a large white truck coming northbound turned off the highway into Newell Fuel and struck Konsavage's car causing him to strike Mullen's car. Bettie, trying to avoid striking Mullen's car, side-swiped the Konsavage vehicle. All three cars were towed from the scene.
