Play Helps Kids Deal With Fears

If your child has ever been afraid of the dark...or the first day of school...or the bully on the bus, you need to see Night Light, Green Thumb Theater for Young People.

This unique play, showing children how to deal with their fears-real or imagined-is being featured at this year's International Children's Theater Festival, in Wilkes-Barre, May 17, 18 and 19, including a special evening performance at 7 p.m. on May 18.

Night Light, written by the award-winning Canadian playwright, John Lazarus, has been hailed as a valuable tool for educators and parents, as well as a wonderful entertainment for the entire family. Not only does the play explore the serious issue of childhood fears but it offers practical solutions as well.

Night Light is one of six international acts being showcased at the Second Annual International Children's Theater Festival. Also playing this year are groups from Japan, England, Taiwan, Holland and Scotland. Major sponsors for the Festival are: WNEP/TV, The New York Times Company, Northeastern Bank and Penna. Gas & Water Company.

Tickets are available for school groups and other organizations.
