More incentive might solve cafeteria puzzle

The Dallas school cafeteria has operated at a loss for another year, and everyone involved is hoping to find a way to reverse the trend.

The Dallas district's perennial losses contrast with some similar districts ability to operate at a profit, or at least break even. Several possible reasons for the loss have been given, including failure to sell enough Type A lunches (the only ones the state reimburses for), high labor costs, and not enough use of volunteer help.

It's not certain if any or all of these factors make it more difficult to fund the cafeteria in Dallas, though we suspect low sales of full lunches may be a cause. We do wonder, though, about the wisdom of allowing the food service vendor to pass along losses to the district.

It seems that a contract that required the company to accept the consequences of its own management might serve the district better. Under the pressure to perform better for its own good, the company might come up with some new ideas on how to serve nutritious food within the district's budget.

If this year brings in yet another loss, maybe the district can negotiate a contract that offers a real incentive for the vendor to perform well.

DER unit is welcome

The Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources had some good news for us this week. DER announced the formation of a 14-person emergency response unit that it says will speed its response to emergencies.

As we learn more about the danger from toxic substances that have been discarded, it's good to know that DER has moved to improve its ability to respond. The team, which covers nine counties in the department's Wilkes-Barre Region, will still be overwhelmed from time to time, as more than one emergency arises at the same time. Still, it's formation is a sign that DER recognizes the needs of our area.

We hope it's not required, but we are glad to know the special unit is there. If you think an environmental emergency needs instant response, call the Wilkes-Barre office of the DER at 826-2511 at any time of day or night.

Welcome back, Grotto

It's been a long wait, for pizza lovers and for Joe Paglianite, but Joe's Grotto has finally reopened. For now the Grotto will operate on a reduced - though very attractive - scale, as construction is still underway in the large main dining area.

No matter, Back Mountain residents and visitors to Harveys Lake will want to stop in, say hello, and sample some of the food they've been missing since last fall.

Congratulations to our baseball and softball teams

They haven't all made it to the finals, but the Back Mountain baseball and softball teams played hard and won some games before bowing out in their respective playoffs.

Still in the thick of things are the Back Mountain Little League American All-Stars and Legion teams. We wish them the best of success in their remaining games, and congratulate all the teams for their outstanding play during this season.

Library news

Library says thanks to John Shaskas

By NANCY KOZEMCHAK

I would like to offer a super 'round of applause' to Dr. John Shaskas, the general chairman of our 43rd annual Back Mountain Memorial Library Auction. In spite of the rainout on Friday night, the gross amount realized from the auction should come close to $72,000.

Of this amount, after all expenses and bills are paid, the library should come close to $35,000 net profit; which is exactly what the auction was budgeted for.

John has been chairman for three out of the last four years and has done a terrific job each time. Only one person has been chairman for four years and that man was Howard Risley, who served in 1947, 48, 49 and 55. I wonder if John would like to top this record or at least tie it. How about it, John, one more time?

This auction is still one of the most exciting and admirable events that I have ever been involved in. After 43 years, it has become an exciting part of the summer in the Back Mountain, and something to look forward to after the 4th of July holiday.

Mrs. Gertrude Moss, our former Ham 'n Yegg Chairman, was at the auction one evening, as I saw her picture in the paper. Unfortunately, I did not get to see and talk with her. Working with her the last few years on her pet project, I became quite involved with her book work and her lists of names. She is a remarkable woman and we are indebted to her for her dedicated effort to our cause.

As we clear the grounds, put the equipment away, and try to get the records in order, we look forward to 1990 and the 44th annual auction.

Have you been asked to give a speech or testimonial at a club, or participate in a memorial service? Perhaps you have been called upon to make a toast at a wedding, anniversary, shower, or party? The library has books that can take the "stage-fright" out of such an occasion on the 808.5 shelves. You can browse through that section and gain that extra dose of confidence for the special event.

New books at the library: "Garden of Lies" by Eileen Goudge is the unforgettable story of an act that takes but moments to accomplish but changes destinies forever. It tells of the lives irrevocably altered by that single, reckless decision. It is a mesmerizing debut.

"Stranger in Savannah" by Eugenia Price is the continuing saga of the Browning, Mackay, and Stiles families, plunging them into the Civil War with a memorable novel. The story is exhaustively researched, meticulously detailed and brought to life with storytelling artistry.
