These two photos were brought to The Dallas Post's office last week by John J. "Jack" Haxton. Mr. Haxton attended the Lehman schools as a boy, and wondered if anyone in the area could identify the people in the photographs.

The photos were taken around 1925-30 in front of the Lehman School, which at that time housed all classes. The building is today used as the Lehman Elementary School and is located on Old Lake Road.

If you can identify some or all of the people in the photographs, please let us know. We will publish the names in the next issue of The Post. Mr. Haxton donated the originals to the Lake-Lehman School District.

Mr. Haxton would like to hear from anyone who knows the people in the photos. Readers may write him at 50 Garside Crescent, Toronto, Ontario Canada, M-6-M. 2Z6.

Penn State recycling program earns award

Penn State Wilkes-Barre has been awarded the Recycling Award for Outstanding Educational Institution in Northeastern Pennsylvania in recognition of outstanding achievements and commitments in recycling by faculty, staff and students.

Thomas A. Winter, Ph.D., professor of Physics at Penn State Wilkes-Barre and spearhead of the program, accepted the award for the campus at the Northeastern Pennsylvania Recycle Show and Workshop held recently in Pittston. Dr. Winter gave a presentation on how Penn State Wilkes-Barre's recycling program operates.

According to Dr. Winter, in the past year the program has been in operation, Penn State Wilkes-Barre has recycled 56,000 lbs. of material. That figure represents 60 percent of all campus trash, which is 80 percent of the program's goal of 75 percent of all trash generated by the campus.

In the past year, 33+ truckloads of material have been brought to market, and 55,700 lbs. of paper, cardboard, glass, metal and plastic have been saved. Financially, more than $300 in discarded supplies has been reused and $860 in direct income has been earned. The money received from recycling is donated to the campus's Annual Fund which grants scholarships to Penn State Wilkes-Barre students.

Recycling also has an environmental effect. Penn State Wilkes-Barre's efforts have saved 129,000 kilowatt hours of energy or enough to power 21 homes for a year at an average residential usage of 500 kilowatt hours per month. Additionally, by recycling paper, an estimated 390 trees were saved by the campus.

"Considering that the state-wide goal for the late 1990's is only 25 percent of all trash, Penn State Wilkes-Barre has made a remarkable achievement in its first year," said Winter.
