Area students to participate in Shakespeare theater workshop

The magic and poetry of William Shakespeare's romantic fantasy "The Tempest" will come to life at College Misericordia July 19-22, with a professional director and cast from Washington, D.C. presenting a musical production of William Shakespeare's final play. Area high school and college students will have the opportunity to study Shakespearean theatre with those professionals when they take part in College Misericordia's first theatre workshops, presented in conjunction with Theatre-On-The-Green's production.

Students from Myers, Wyoming Area, Dallas, Bishop Hoban, Coughlin, Wyoming Seminary, and Lake-Lehman high schools, Wilkes University, Elizabethtown College and Randolph-Macon Women's College also will learn about set construction, lighting, makeup and other theatre skills. The workshops will provide the students with a valuable educational experience, said Diane Ushinski, chair of the Theatre-On-The-Green committee.

One workshop is intended for high school seniors and college students who will work as production assistants. The other is for less experienced high school students.

Six students, recommended by their high school drama coaches, will serve as production assistants to director Jim Petosa, artistic director of the National Players, and the cast and crew. In this workshop, coordinated by Dallas Area High School drama director Don Hopkins, the students will work closely with Petosa for hands-on experience with sets, costumes, props and other aspects of professional theatre.

David Stout, associate professor of English at Luzerne County Community College and a member of last year's Theatre-On-The-Green cast, will coordinate the second workshop, open to area high school students grades 9-12. This activity will give students a chance to learn all aspects of theatre and will include instruction on voice, gestures and movements.

This year's production assistants are: David Drake, Shavertown, Wilkes University freshman; David Zachary, Dallas, Elizabethtown freshman; Carrie Ramp, Hunlock Creek, Randolph-Macon Women's College freshman; Megan
