World famous painting at Everhart Museum

The famous painting, The Lackawanna Valley (1855), by George Inness is on display through October 14 at the Everhart Museum next to Scranton's Nay Aug Park. The work, on special loan from the National Gallery of Art, Washington; is part of an exhibit Northeastern Pennsylvania in Art: A Century of Tradition. The keystone of this temporary display is the Inness painting, The Lackawanna Valley, showing what was to become Scranton and the surrounding valley. In 1855, a young George Inness was commissioned by the first president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad to paint the prospering railroads train yard. (Today we know it as the Steamtown National Historic Site). Inness was paid $75 for his work which was later sold by the railroad.

Also included in the exhibit is the George Luks mural, Necho Allen Discovering Coal (1927) which is on loan from the Pennsylvania National Bank in Pottsville, Pa. The painting depicts the historic beginnings of the Anthracite Region. Several paintings from the Everhart's permanent collection are also part of this show. A mural by artist-naturalist, Charles Robert Knight, depicts a prehistoric scene in Northeastern Pennsylvania more than 280 million years ago during the Carboniferous period. A noted painter of Pennsylvania landscapes, John Willard Raught focused on scenes from the anthracite industry. Other artists, who's views are represented in this exhibition are: Frederic C. Knight, Priscilla Garrett and Michael Gallagher.
