Jean Elliott Fader has illustrations published

Jean Elliott Fader, a Dallas native, recently had her pencil sketches of the Catskills published in "Deep Woods"; a collection John Burroughs' selected essays from 1871 to 1912.

"Deep Woods" is the seventh volume in Peregrine Smith's Literary Naturalists Series which reintroduces the writings of noted authors who have selected mature writing as literary expression. Most of Burroughs' essays are written in the settings of upstate New York and it includes descriptions of Maine, Grand Canyon, Yosemite and Yakutat Bay, Alaska. To begin her sketches, Fader visited upstate New York and studied the areas which Burroughs wrote about.

Fader's talent surfaced at East Providence Junior and Senior High Schools, Rhode Island, where she studied art, along with a college preparatory program, with teachers who were graduates of the Rhode Island School of Design. While attending Brown University, Rhode Island, she took electives in art studio and art history. Currently, she studies art with Sue Hand, a local artist who recently published her first book, Hand and Fader recently spoke to the group of Cider Painters of America, to explain how they developed their projects for publication.

Fader's part time hobby has transpired into an artist's dream. In addition to her published pencil sketches, her water color, Winter Harbor, Annapolis, recently received the General Excellence award at the Cider Painters of America's 8th Annual Member Exhibit. The exhibit was at the Art Gallery at the Heft House, Shavertown, and there were 70 exhibitors from the Eastern United States who displayed their work.

She has attended lectures and workshops sponsored by the Wyoming Art League, including workshops with nationally known water colorists Bruce Johnson, Barbara Nechis and Joan Rothermel. She is a member of the Wyoming Valley Art League and Cider Painters of America. Besides being a part time artist, Fader is a litigation paralegal for the regional law firm of Hourigan, Kluger, Spohrer & Quinn, P.C. She resides in Dallas with her husband Gordon and two children.

"Deep Woods" is available in sale at Back Mountain Books, Country Club Shopping Center, Dallas. The book is edited and introduced by Richard F. Fleck, Ph.D., Denver, Colorado, a professor at Teikyo Loretto Heights University.
