Taking Stock of Acme's First Century

It'll probably come as no surprise to you that every big company starts small. And ours is no different. But not every company gets to be as old as we are. In fact, 1991 is our 100th year! And boy, have there been changes along the way.

When our founders Samuel Robinson and Robert Crawford opened their first store in 1891, they employed two clerks and a stock boy. Today, they'd find it takes more than 200 people to run just one superstore. Their first store sold a few hundred items... like canned goods and staples such as eggs, butter, coffee, sugar and flour. Items the manager tracked in a handwritten logbook he kept in his pocket. Today, they'd find it takes a computer to keep tabs on the price and location of over 30,000 items at 270 Acmes.

The dream of our founders to one day manage three or more stores in an effort to offer high quality foods at the lowest possible prices... has grown into one of the most successful chains in the country.

In fact, there have been so many changes that Samuel and Robert might not recognize the modern supermarket. But we are quite sure that despite the passage of a century... they'd immediately recognize the one thing about their company that has never changed.

Samuel and Robert knew good people the moment they met them. And I know they'd still be pleased today.
