Putterman's paintings at the Everhart

The exciting, bold and colorful works of Pennsylvania artist, Florence Putterman go on display June 30 at the Everhart Museum in Scranton.

The exhibition, "Florence Putterman: A 20 Year Survey," 1970-1990 features her innovative approach to materials, her intuitive working process and her interest in the art of other cultures. All of these aspects of the artist establish her in the modernist tradition.

The show is open during regular museum hours, until September 3, 1991.

Putterman's works are dominated by symbolic images drawn from her personal experiences and world travels. 'Ms. Putterman says, "my symbols and signs must be universal representations of specific places, actual things, genuine human experiences and emotions, historic and prehistoric monuments and markings". (quoted in Florence Putterman: Reflections on Nature by Calvin Goodman, Buyways Gallery, Sarasota, Florida n.d.)

Symbols included in her works are the heart motif of the 1970's, petroglyphs based on Native American images which she studied during the late 1970's, and more representational images of fish, birds and animals explored during the past decade. According to Randy Ploog, Curator of American and Contemporary Art at the Palmer Museum of Art and exhibition coordinator, "Putterman's fascination for symbols, combined with her experimental approach to materials, such as her crushed sea shell encrusted canvases, makes her work sensuously rich and intellectually interesting".

The 47 works in this exhibition were organized by the Palmer Museum of Art at the Pennsylvania State University, and funded in part by the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts.

Invisible stains

Most stains occur from spillage of food, oily substances, and beverages. Often, a beverage is blotted up. and when the area dries, there is no noticeable stain. But later, with exposure to heat or with the passage of time, a yellow or brownish stain will appear. This is caused by the oxidation of sugar contained in the beverage. Most beverages, from lemonade to ginger ale to champagne, contain sugar. This component turns brown by a process called oxidation. You have probably seen this happen very quickly when you have eaten an apple and watched the core portion turn brown after exposure to the air.

You can help the drycleaner do a better job for you if you will point out any such spillage when you take your garments to be cleaned. The cleaner must treat these stains prior to cleaning since the heat of drying of finishing may set the stain
