in prize money which was awarded this year, money which can be used to settle some of its debts, including $34,000 owed to the Congressional Equipment Center for the original leveling work. At the meeting with government officials on November 15, Attorney Julie Zeller, council for the Department of Environmental Resources, said that while the fair could be facing some fines, they would not be the maximum of $10,000 per day. "We're not in the foreclosure business. We want to see the area stabilized," said Zeller. "If everybody works together, we'll get out of this. We will be able to meet the December 1 deadline," said Kelly. "The only thing that would hold us back would be the weather." Kelly said that the fair is also trying to use the grounds for fundraisers. The large, Red Ambrose Exhibitor's Building can be rented for $400 a day, while the smaller exhibitors building can be rented for $200 a day. Storage space is also available for the winter for $1 a square foot.

When Steve Leonardo brought his 15 years of experience in the dry cleaning business to Dallas, one thing he knew was that good service by itself would not be enough to reach his sales goals. Soon after opening Steven's Town & Country Cleaners at the Country Club Plaza, Steve began a weekly ad schedule with The Post.

"We offer a full range of dry cleaning services, including wedding gown care," Steve said recently. "We felt The Post could help get our message out in a way that other media couldn't." The message could be as simple as extended store hours, which in Town & Country Cleaners case means staying open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. weekdays and 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays.

The result, Steve said, is that his new venture is off to a good start, and he's made many new friends in the Back Mountain.

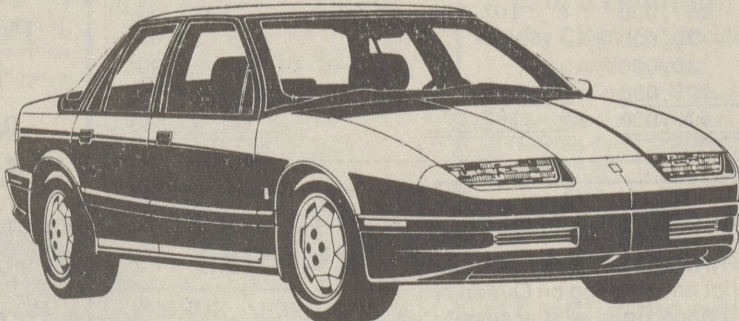

Whether you're starting a new business or trying to expand an existing one, advertising in The Dallas Post can help. Just ask Steve.
